What is your reaction to the signing of the INF treaty between the United States and the Soviet Union?

'It's definitely a first step in attempts to complete a lot more of that must be done, including more treaties with long-range missiles, as well as civil rights issues that really need to be addressed.'

— Matthew Scott, junior, philosophy

'We need to work on nuclear issues before we discuss other issues like human rights. I think human right issues are important, but we must not confuse them with military issues.'

— Jennifer Curtis, senior, community health

'I'm very hopeful that it will make things safer. There will be fewer short-range weapons... I am hopeful that the people in the senate will ratify it.'

— Bruce Shulz, graduate, business

'I think it's great. Just the coming together of the two leaders is an achievement in itself and certainly a step toward world peace. I think it's an achievement, and I think we should be happy to have done that.'

— Christine Unpingco, senior, journalism

'It's a start to future peace because this is the first time in many years that the two leader have met successfully. I am very satisfied because even though it's just intermediate- and short-range missiles, that is fine.'

— Anggara Situmeang, sophomore, biology

'I think the relationship between the United States and Russia should become one on a permanent basis instead on one on a short term.'

— Pete Sill, junior, East Asian languages

'I am against all kinds of weapons, nuclear or not nuclear... I know it's impossible, it's Utopia. But why not, we can dream?'

— Marielle Regondaud, graduate student, business
