NIT bid 'shocks' cagers

Reports of the demise of the Oregon men's basketball season, to paraphrase Mark Twain, were greatly exaggerated.

Officials from the National Invitational Tournament breathed new life into the corpse by selecting Oregon as host of a first-round NIT game Thursday at McArthur Court against the 20-10 Santa Clara Broncos.

The game will begin at about 9:15 p.m., after a previously scheduled high school tournament game.

Tickets go on sale today at 9 a.m., and the student price is $6. The ASUO contract that provided free student admission covers only the regular season, said Chris Voelz, University associate athletic director.

General admission tickets will be offered for $8, reserved seats for $12.

Oregon, 15-13 and a first-round loser in the Pacific-10 Conference Tournament on Saturday (see story below), was considered dead on arrival Saturday after losing by 21 points to Stanford, which also got an NIT offer.

It's time to reconsider. Coach Don Monson and his players offered the same reason for Oregon's unexpected inclusion in the NIT's 32-team field.

All agreed the fans who made Oregon's home attendance the second highest in the conference were the deciding factors.

"Give credit to the fans. They're probably the reason we were picked," said senior Rick Osborn, who was caught completely off guard by the news.

Taylor and Osborn, believing their college hoop careers were history, were hitting the books and thinking about class finals, not tournament finals.

"I was shocked. I thought we needed a win against Stanford to get in, but I guess we got lucky," Taylor said.

Ducks take early Pac-10 exit

Oregon packed up its bags and took an early exit from the Goodyear Pacific-10 Conference Tournament on Saturday as the Stanford Cardinal finished the Ducks off 88-67 in men's basketball action at Tucson's McKale Center.

Stanford outscored Oregon 52-31 in the final 20 minutes of the second-round game.

The Ducks, 15-13 overall, were a model of inconsistency. They played two separate games after leading by as much as eight in the first half, then shooting .303 (10 of 33) in the second.

The victory gave Stanford (20-10, 11-7) its first 20-win season since 1941-42.
