

Birden suffers season-ending knee injury

J.J. Birden, a former Duck football player and current member of the Oregon track team, tore ligaments in his right knee on Monday during a workout with the National Football League's Cleveland Browns.

Birden, the Browns' eighth-round draft choice in the April 25th NFL draft, will miss the remainder of the track season, and according to wire service reports, will likely miss the entire 1988 NFL season.

"It's an unfortunate thing that happened," said Oregon men's track coach Bill Dellinger. "It's unfortunate primarily to him. It was a freak injury."

Birden underwent surgery on Tuesday.

Birden was going for a pass during a non-contact drill when he injured the knee, yet another setback for the senior from Portland.

In 1986, Birden suffered a broken arm in a game at Nebraska and missed seven weeks of the season, and missed action in 1987 because of an iron deficiency and an injured ankle.

Birden will no doubt be missed by the Ducks in the NCAA Track and Field Championships in Eugene later this month, but Oregon must take the stage without its star performer.

"As far as the track team is concerned, we'll just have to tighten the belt another notch," Dellinger said. "We have to go on from here. It's not the end of the track program."
