of Chinese and Japanese publications, juvenile materials, curriculum items, rare books, manuscripts and photographs.

Works by Northwest authors are included in the library's Oregon Collection. The collection also has publications about Oregon and from state agencies.

The library also offers computerized searches through the Information Online Service. For a fee, a computer will access databases in order to find articles on a patron's topic.

Librarians also offer reference service to any patron wishing assistance in researching a subject. The reference librarians offer help in using the reference section of the library and in locating additional information.

Another service of the library is the Inter-library Loan Service, in which periodicals or books not owned by the library can be obtained.

All library services can be accessed by patrons with physical limitations. A wheelchair ramp is located at the library's east entrance, and an elevator is inside.

Seven library branches are located throughout campus. The Law Library is in the School of Law. The Science Library is in the science complex, and the Mathematics Library is in Fenton Hall.

The Map Library is in Condon Hall, the Public Affairs Library is in Hendricks Hall, and the Architecture and Allied Arts Library is in Lawrence Hall.

In Fenton Hall is the University Archives collection. These materials may be viewed by appointment.

Items which circulate from the Library system are available for loan to registered University students, faculty and staff members. Borrowing privileges also extend to students at many other state colleges, and a Public Borrowers program is available to community members not affiliated with the University.

Those who reside within the city limits are eligible to receive a borrower's card free from the Eugene Public Library. The library has more than 265,000 items.

According to Assistant City Librarian Carol Hildebrand, a recent survey showed that 15 percent of Eugene Public Library patrons were local college students.

Though not a research library, the public library can be useful for further study on a topic, or for diversion.

The library has a magazine and newspaper center, an art and music room, a wide selection of non-fiction books, and a large fiction section as well. In addition, two microcomputers are available for patron use.

Full automation helps with bookkeeping accuracy and patron convenience. An online catalog replaced the library's card catalog four years ago.

Reference service and the Inter-library Loan service also are available at the library.

The library is wheelchair accessible, and it also has a Visual-tek and Braille Writer for use by the visually impaired.

Several smaller libraries serve the Eugene area. The Lane Community College Library offers online reference searches and the Inter-library Loan service, and it has more than 55,000 books.

More than 50,000 volumes are in the Northwest Christian College Learning Resource Center. The Eugene Bible College Library has 27,000.

Sacred Heart General Hospital has a library, and the Lane County Museum has a book and photograph collection which is open to the public by appointment.

Legal books, documents and journals can be found at the Lane County Law Library, which has 16,500 volumes.

The Eugene Register-Guard has a library with more individual items than any other area library. Besides having a number of maps and audiovisual materials, it catalogues some five million newspaper clippings.
