

secure for democracy and Husky games.

Earlier in the season Washington looked like it might be a patsy, struggling to beat Purdue and San Jose State. But they got their act together, played UCLA and USC tough, and we got a game on our hands.

Washington fans think so. Last year Oregon sent 7,000 tickets to Seattle so that Husky fans could drive five hours and celebrate the loss. This year, according to Hunt Holsapple, Athletic Tickets director, they requested even more tickets. But the game sold out weeks ago, and the Huskies got stuck with only about 6,000 seats.

And even though they invented it, the purple people section is probably still not going to do the Wave. Not in the Ducks stadium.

Oregon has to win the game tomorrow. A loss will put them right back where they were for year after year. Mediocrity. Good teams win big games, and Saturday is the biggest game of the year. The Ducks may have been overmatched against USC, and may be by UCLA to come, but Washington is an even game. The Ducks have to win that second game in a row to get the respect they deserve. It's time to find out how good the Ducks really are.
