What do you think the community should do about the homeless situation?

'A lot of them are skilled, they're just down and out and have no place to go. I think we need to let them know that we care about them and that we think they can become integrated again.'

— Dan Shepherd, junior, economics/Asian studies

'We need to make people more aware that there is a problem. I think a lot of people just think these people bum around because they don't want to work or something and they don't really know there is a problem.'

— Laurel Hammack, senior, English

'It doesn't mean we should ignore them. The best thing would be provide incentives, the city government can provide some incentives to build housing here. The homeless problem is like in any other city.'

— Ken Shah, GTF, Finance Department

1981, whereby one percent of the construction funds for public projects over $50,000 is set aside for art work. Joyce is one of three area artists commissioned to make works for the airport, and will be paid $15,000 for his efforts. The mural should be in place by next June, he said.

Joyce said he felt he got a good cultural mix from the photo sessions, noting that people of several ethnic backgrounds were represented, as were many age groups. He added that he and his associates had been concerned that the photos might become dated too soon after being installed at the airport, but said Saturday's session eased their concerns.

Joyce's work is represented in galleries in New York, Los Angeles and Seattle, and his most recent show in Eugene was at the University Museum of Art. He has lived in Eugene since 1970, and in 1986 was awarded an Oregon artist fellowship by the Oregon Arts Commission.
