than self-motivation," Heiny said of Baker's work ethic. "She is one of the best examples to the team as far as work is concerned."

Before packing her bags for Oregon, Baker, an honorable mention all-America choice by Street and Smith's and Parade magazine at Hanford High School, received offers to play for current Pac-10 powerhouses Washington and Stanford, as well as recent Duck-killer Colorado.

"One reason I didn't go to Stanford was that I thought they weren't going to be very good," Baker said. "I played with Trisha Stevens (1987-88 Pac-10 All-Freshman team) on the junior national team and we kidded her a lot about her decision to go there."

"After (the Ducks) lost to Colorado in Hawaii, I kind of wondered what would have happened had I gone there or to another school," she continued. "Then again, I'm not sure where I would've stood with other teams."

Following the Ducks' most recent win against Oregon State, a game in which her playing time was limited, Baker found herself doing not so much celebrating as soulsearching.

"After the game, I got back to the hotel and started to cry," Baker said. "I never had a chance to be a part of it. It seemed like OSU was more balanced and they were able to put more players in the game. Things like that always look great when you are on the other team."

Despite her thoughts of what could have been, Baker remains fairly comfortable in her role as starting guard for the Webfoots.

"I just hope I can be happy wherever I'm at," she said. "I wanted to go someplace that would give me a lot of good memories, and I think playing basketball at Oregon will give me at least that."

Like most athletes, Baker realizes that there is room for improvement in her performance. Unlike most athletes, however,

Baker is undaunted when it comes to finding answers.

"I'm still young so I ask a lot of questions," Baker said. "I haven't taken much guff from the other players about it, though. It is the same in school — I can't stand just sitting there clueless about something."

"If I don't know the answer to a math problem or something, then it will bother me the whole day," she said. "I just figure that it's better to ask now than to look stupid later."
