Do you think the media over-play racial issues?

"To a relative degree there is a fair representation by the media. I think not just here but all of the American media lean toward whites because whites are the majority. That always happens when you have a majority and a minority."

—Paolo Bahr, junior, biology

"I don't think so. Especially since we just celebrated Martin Luther King Day. I do think that there should be more attention paid to racial issues. I don't really see much about it in the news. Sure, when it deals with cultural activities, when there is a need you hear about it."

— Cheryl Camburn, senior, English

"Awareness on campus of racial issues doesn't appear that much. When there is an issue as Martin Luther King's holiday, we all get together and bond. Maybe the P.R. for cultural events has gone down."

—Kathryn Donahoe, senior, rhetoric communication

"No, I haven't noticed. I have noticed a few articles in the paper that seemed out of place, went a little overboard maybe in dealing with an issue."

—Brian Handy, freshman, business

"Not too much attention is paid. Important issues should be dealt with. If they, (the media) don't mention the issues you get the idea that everything is O.K. when it's not. From what we read, sometimes it's accurate, sometimes it's not. It could always be a little more accurate."

—Ignacio Solis, junior, architecture

"I think that most of the media is very fair in reporting on the issues. Yet, I do feel that there is a little discrimination in some of the articles. It seems some of them are written a little to the left, but I really don't think that has too much to do with the way people feel about the issues."

—Shipo Lin, graduate student, physics
