

OREGON STATE SUPREME COURT AT UO LAW SCHOOL

Students at the University Law school had the opportunity to observe the Oregon State Supreme Court in operation during its annual session at the school. Students observed as prosecuting and defense attorneys presented arguments to the Supreme Court and were able to ask the justices questions about points of law or practice after the session concluded.

On Feb. 6, the University's new Chancellor, Thomas Bartlett, began his first official day on the job, replacing former Chancellor William "Bud" Davis who resigned his position June 30, 1988 under pressure from Governor Neil Goldschmidt.

SNOWFALL

The city received an uncharacteristic blanket of snow as the "Siberian Express" rolled through Eugene. While the white mantle turned the campus into a picturesque playground for some, it unfortunately became a battleground for others.

Hundreds of students, involved in a snowball fight that got out of hand, attacked cars driving on Agate street between 13th and 15th avenues causing hundreds of dollars of damage to personal property, and drove back police trying to quell the violence.

Those who were responsible for the damage have, for the most part, gone unidentified leaving the unfortunate victims, many of whom were fellow students, to pay for the damages themselves.
