UNIVERSITY OF OREGON
 April 11, 1989

Open Letter to Members of the University Community:

We are writing to express our strong commitment to promoting diversity on our campus. University students deserve an atmosphere conducive to learning, with free and open interchange among all concerned, where lives can be enriched by interaction with people of all races, ethnicities, and creeds.

The actions of a few who would poison this atmosphere with intolerance cannot and will not be permitted. No student or staff or faculty member should ever be subjected to discrimination, and especially to harassment, based on race. Racial discrimination, in particular racial harassment, violates academic standards, the concept of collegiality, and the inherent expectations of trust on a college campus.

People who do behave in this fashion should be aware that their actions may bring them significant legal, as well as professional, consequences. In particular, recent court decisions have indicated that actions, including expressions directed at minority members that disrupt the school environment, can be subject to penalty.

In this connection, the University plans to have in place by next fall guidelines relating to racial discrimination and harassment, together with a consideration of possible sanctions. The offices of the President and Provost will also be working together to plan other actions that will promote racial equality in the University community and will make clear the University's firm commitment to a campus free of racism.
