Do you think the religious studies programs at the University should be cut?

"With Northwest Christian College being so close, religious studies would be one of the first things to cut because they could pick up some of the classes at NCC and maybe get even better instruction there."

Beth Lucier, senior, elementary education

"It's good to have a lot of diverse points of view at the University. It wouldn't matter to me personally if they cut the program, but that's not the important issue."

Mike Reeder, senior, economics

"No, I don't think the programs should be cut. I'm upset with the fact that it is going on. They might not be able to have the faculty needed. Religious studies is definitely of high value to the University."

Norine McElhany, senior, psychology

"No, taking away religious studies takes away from the diversity of the University. When you cut away from programs like that, it is not fair to people who want to study religion. It is history."

Brent Heimuller, senior, chemistry

"I believe it's a good idea to have insight into different religions. It's good to have religious studies just for that reason — to get insight."

Jose Cortez, junior, leisure studies

Director candidates to give public talks

Four vie for affirmative action post

Four candidates for the director position at the University's Office of Affirmative Action will give public talks this week and next. A question-and-answer period will follow each presentation.

Sandra Holbrook, director of equal opportunity and academic personnel at North Dakota State University in Fargo, will speak Monday in the EMU Forum Room at 4 p.m.

Miguel Ornelas, director of the Affirmative Action Program at Bowling Green University in Ohio, will speak Wednesday at 4 p.m. in the EMU Gumwood Room.

Marion Metivier-Redd, special assistant to the president for equal opportunity and affirmative action at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, will give her presentation Tuesday, May 16, in the EMU Maple Room at 4 p.m.

Diane Wong Paschall, consultant on equal opportunity and affirmative action programs at Roxbury Community College in Boston and a former attorney with the Enforcement Division of the State Ethics Commission, will speak at 4 p.m. Wednesday, May 17 in the EMU Walnut Room.

Holbrook, a University alumnus, has been at North Dakota since 1974 when she was assistant director of the Division of Continuing Studies. In 1977, Holbrook became the director of North Dakota's equal opportunity office.

She received her bachelor's degree in English from the University in 1963 and went on to get a master's in education from North Dakota State University in 1979. Holbrook earned her doctorate in educational administration from the University of Minnesota in 1984.

Ornelas completed his undergraduate work at Texas A & I University in 1973 with a double major in sociology and Spanish. He received his master's and doctorate degrees in sociology at Bowling Green.

Before becoming director of the Bowling Green affirmative action office, Ornelas was first the equal employment coordinator and then the executive director for the Ohio Hispanic Institute of Opportunity. He has been at Bowling Green since 1986.

Metivier-Redd has been at the State University of New York at Stony Brook since 1984. From 1978-83, she was the associate director of affirmative action programs for the University of New Mexico.

Metivier-Redd completed her undergraduate work in English at Eastern Connecticut State University in 1977 and went on to receive her master's of arts in public administration from the University of New Mexico in 1988.

Paschall was with the enforcement division for the Massachusetts ethics commission from 1986-88. Before that, she was a policy analyst from 1984-85 for the Massachusetts Advocacy Center, which specialized in children's rights.

Paschall received her bachelor's degree in Spanish and history from Cleveland State University in 1980. She went on to study at the Harvard Law School where she earned her degree in 1983.
