Do you believe the rioters from Saturday night's party should be legally prosecuted?

"If they did something wrong then I suppose they should be reprimanded but not thrown in jail. They shouldn't throw the book at them because they're probably first-time offenders. This shows all of us a lesson that we have to be more responsible."

Mark J. Hash, junior, management

"I don't think they should go to jail for a two-year penalty. Two years is a little extreme. Maybe they should be fined a stiff fine, but two years is too much."

Sheri Runnels, senior, sociology

"I think they should be prosecuted only if you prosecute every single person at the party that did anything illegal — which would be 200 people. Three people got caught. What I think they did was stupid but hard to prosecute only them and no one else. Prosecute Ollie North instead."

Takett Austin, junior, Spanish and computer science

"Public attention should be drawn to them and that kind of action should be discouraged, but locking them up and charging a fine is not worthwhile. They should be reprimanded not prosecuted."

Sarah Murphy, junior human services

"I don't want to see anyone get harshed on by the police for being drunk but anyone who throws a bottle with heads around obviously has no regard for people. Being drunk is no excuse for throwing a bottle."

Bill Burke, junior, English
