rode an ASUO veto on the JELL program budget. The decision came after JELL Managing Editor Paul Larson convinced the committee that a 10 percent budget increase would allow the program to grow and become self-sustaining.

In addition, the committee rejected a veto on the ASUO Executive budget.

The current ASUO Executive vetoed the budget, requesting that an additional amount be allocated for ASUO election costs.

"A perennial problem has been the elections line item," said Gaffney. "The budget should accurately reflect the operating costs of the group.

The EMU Outdoor Program received an approximately $500 reduction in its allocation after its approved $26,682 budget was vetoed by the ASUO. The group will make up the difference by charging a $5 membership fee for non-students

The second proposed amendment would require faculty members to assign a failing grade to any student found guilty in an academic dishonesty case.

Marlene Drescher, director of the student advocacy office. said this change would stabilize an inconsistent process.

Under the code's present wording, the penalty a student might receive depends on the leniency on the individual faculty member, but the proposed

However, written statements from the Faculty Advisory Committee and Alison Baker, executive assistant to University President Paul Olum, said the conduct code officers have no right to tell faculty what grade to assign students.

Dan Williams, University vice president for administration, will spend the next two weeks reviewing testimony before making any changes to the proposed amendments.

State Ballot Measure 1 loses; local voters approve 4J levy

Though Ballot Measure 1 failed statewide, it fared much better in Lane County, where it lost by only 25 votes, than it did in most other coun-

The measure, stongly supported by Gov. Neil Goldschmidt and other political leaders, received only 177,874, or 41 percent, votes in favor as opposed to 253,840, or 59 percent, against in final statewide election returns that confirmed a light voter turnout.

In Lane County, which has 181 of the Oregon's 2,261 polling precincts, the result was a close, 21,274-21,249, loss for the school finance reform measure.

Statewide, only two of Oregon's 36 counties approved Measure 1. Benton County approved it 6.513 (53 percent) to 5,682 (47 percent) and Deschutes County passed the measure 6,910 (55 percent) to 5,766 (45 percent).

In Eugene, voters passed a $190,500 one-year operating levy for the Downtown Development District by a vote of 11,209 (57 percent) to 8,482 (43 percent). The tax is designed to support and recruit businesses in the Downtown Eugene area.

Local voters also approved a one-year, $3,927,177 special supplemental operating levy for Eugene's School District 4].

The one-time levy won by just two percentage points, 11,787 (51 percent) to 11,476 (49 per-

But the task hasn't been an easy one, especially with the current administration's attempt "to save face."

"Saving face is really what Hull, North and Rob Owen (another key figure in the Iran-Contra scandal) and a number of people involved in running illegally the war against Nicaragua have been involved in since 1985." Honey said.

This is seen in North's attempts "to pin the blame of the activities on his superiors, Reagan's refusal to attend North's trail and President George Bush's "ducking" of his involvement in Honduras and the Iran-Contra affair, Honey said.

It also was reflected in the poem written by Hull in his May 20, 1985 report to North that Honey read.

'Hail Mary, queen of grace, The Southern Front is a horrible disgrace. Help us Lord to change the pace, so that we all may save face," wrote Hull, who was arrested by the Costa Rican authorities on Jan. 12 on charges that include alleged drug trafficking.

The need to save face and "cover up the scandal" has made it difficult for Honey and Avirgan to prove the full scope of the Secret Team's involvement in the "illegal war against Nicaragua," Honey said.

Their case, which was dismissed on June 23 and is currently awaiting hearing by an appellate court Atlanta.

Co-plaintiff hopes case gets increased scrutiny

By Brian Gallagher Emerald Contributor

Martha Honey, co-plaintiff in a lawsuit over the U.S. government's role in the Iran-Contra affair, said Wednesday that Congress should re-open its investigation of the covert opera-

"Some of the most sinister crimes by people in the government were oftentimes under the guise of national secu-

"We would like Congress to take a fresh look at some of these crimes, particularly the La Penca bombing," said Honey, an award winning journalist, author and co-plaintiff in the Christic Institute lawsuit. in a press conference at the Council for Human Rights in Latin America.

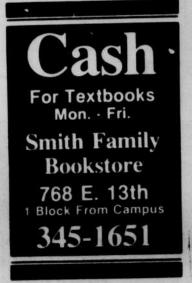

Honey and the Christic Institute brought a civil suit against 29 defendants in May of 1986, charging them with criminal conspiracy and other terrorist activities. These overt acts, taken in direct violation of the Neutrality Act, were conducted by individuals in, or working for the U.S. government, they allege.

Honey's involvement started in 1984 when her husband. ABC-TV cameraman Tony Avirgan, covered a press conference at La Penca. Nicaragua in which eight people were killed and 28 others, including Avirgan, were wounded when a bomb exploded in the shack that was to be used for the con-

The bomb. Honey said, was meant for Eden Pastora, a Nicaraguan rebel leader. He survived but others were not so Honey said much of the investigation to find out who had done the bombing initially was done at her expense. In 1986. Honey and Avirgan teamed up with the Christic Institute, a Washington-based public interest law firm.

Honey said the lawsuit was dismissed last June for what she called "largely political" reasons, but added: "We hope to have the case accepted before the appeals court in Atlanta,
