by volunteers to help birds and animals.

Many of the animals are uncaged so the public can talk to the handlers and get "eyeball to eyeball" with the animals, Beisser said.

The New Zoo will feature pony rides, a petting zoo, elephant rides on Tiki, and a tide pool so people can touch sea animals.

Beisser said the New Zoo event usually attracts younger children and their parents but he would like to see more high school and college students come. "Wildlife conservation is an ongoing process, not just a two-day event," he said.

Beisser said he would like to see everyone get involved in wildlife conservation because little by little humans are destroying the wildlife. "It's my attempt to wake people up," Beisser said.

The New Zoo runs from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Admission is $3.
