similar rights," he said.

Moreover, bicyclists can use other routes to campus besides Alder Street, Ellis said. "There are other places on campus for them to go," he said.

"Another solution we haven't talked about is creating another bike lane," Ellis said. "That could be a refinement on this plan that could be implemented."

However, Perkins said a parking garage would completely disrupt the campus neighborhood.

"I just hate to see a building like a parking garage there to disrupt the environment when you are so limited on what you can do to the structure to make it workable," he said, adding that an academic building would be more pleasing to the area.

Junior landscape architecture major Peter Quady said the parking garage would downgrade the Alder Street area.

"The parking structure as it's planned now would seriously degrade the quality of that end of campus and the living area near there," Quady said. "It could go other places such as near Bean Complex."

Ellis said the proposed structure will be presented before the Campus Planning Committee in June.

"If it is approved, it will go to Paul Olum for approval and after that to the state board," he said.

If the parking garage is approved, construction will begin next fall and will last nine months, Ellis said.

The planning department also displayed plans for additions to the Knight Library at the open house.

Planning Associate Chris Ramey said the library will expand southwards, westwards and upwards for a total of 132,000 new square feet.

"The expansion will provide growth that hasn't been provided for the last 20 years, and it will give room to grow over the next 20 years," Ramey said.

dent Reagan last year might change that. The constitutionality of Reagan's order has yet to be tested.

"That's something for the courts to decide," Dix said.

The U.S. Interior Department — against Goldschmidt's wishes — has announced their intentions to grant oil leases off the Oregon coast as soon as 1992, with production to begin as early as 2005.

Since the announcement, the governor and several members of the Oregon congressional delegation have fought unsuccessfully to overturn or delay the decision.
