sion courses in subjects such as philosophy, German and biology.

Scott has also found time to hold part-time jobs while in school, such as working in laboratories and building houses. He plans to attend a medical school program in which he can receive a Ph.D. while completing his medical training.

Kristin Moody, who is receiving a double major in international studies and French, said she is fully satisfied with her education at the University.

"I think what made the education great was the fact that I had good professors all around," she said. When asked if she had to study in massive amounts to achieve high grades, Moody said that "that's a tricky question."

"I studied quite a bit, I guess," she added. "But I wasn't in the library every weekend or anything."

Moody said she has held a variety of jobs all throughout college, including a work study position in the University's speech department. Moody, whose grade point average is "somewhere between a 3.9 and 4.0," said she took a variety of upper-division courses because she had a wide range of interests and wanted to see which field was most intriguing to her.

Moody decided to focus on international studies, and has a position waiting for her after graduation in Washington, D.C. She will be employed by the International Trade Administration in the Department of Commerce.

Adrienne Hill, who chose English as her major and Scandinavian studies as her minor, said she came to college with the intent on receiving a broad liberal arts background. She feels that she got what she wanted, having taken courses in telecommunications and film, political science and history besides completing the requirements for her major.

Hill has never received a B during her career as a college student. She said that this perfect 4.0 grade point average is not something she set out to achieve when she began college.

"It's been rather stressful (to keep a perfect G.P.A.)," she said. "The further I got along, the more pressure I had to keep it up. I had this record I had to live up to."

"But I'm not a bookworm by any means," she added.

Hill said that while in college, she has been employed at places such as 5th Street Market and the Northwest Coalition for Alternatives to Pesticides, and she presently works as a waitress at Marie Callender's. Next year, Hill will attend graduate school in England. She will go as a recipient of a rotary scholarship, which is worth $23,000.

Hill is "essentially satisfied" with the education she received in college. "It has given me a very solid academic base," she said, "and the professors have been extraordinary in their support and accessibility."

Monty Hindman will receive his degree in English and history. He said when he received the letter notifying him of the Oregon Six award, he didn't realize what it was and almost didn't even read it.

"My roommate and I have been getting things from other honor societies," he explained, "and they just wanted people to send them money. At first I thought that was what (the Phi Beta Kappa award letter) was."
