A Note from the Editor

So far, as I write this, it has been a glorious fall season for the University's sports teams. Both the football team and the volleyball team are undefeated. Fans are pouring through the admission gates in great numbers. National publications are talking about Ducks being contenders.

While the hoopla made putting together this section fun, it also led to some problems. The wide scope of University events and players — especially those of outstanding ability — led to a quandary of what to cover and what would have to be excluded for space limitations.

With that in mind, we've skipped over the obligatory interview with big name players like Bill Musgrave or Derek Loville. The football team could be headed for greatness this year, but by now you've heard all about these guys.

The volleyball team is also playing some great ball this year but you wouldn't know it from The Register-Guard. Therefore, we chose team captain Michele Krebsbach as our cover interview subject.

Focusing on personalities also got us away from the tiresome word-play revolving around the word Ducks. I'd rather not read any more barbs about the Ducks "quacking up." We've been guilty of this sin ourselves, but it's gotten out of hand.

Skipping the easy word-play did make it harder to come up with a headline for this section. The following titles, all revolving around the word volley, were rejected.

"Volley of the Dolls." Too condescending and sexist.

"How Green was my Volley." It seemed to go with the school spirit, but was rejected as being too esoteric.

"Death Volley Days." We then tried aiming for the TV crowd. This one isn't so bad, but it was a little grim.

After striking out with volley, we hit upon the more workmanlike but usable "License to Kill." It seemed to fit both the volleyball team's "Hit Squad" image.
