in the thick of things."

Once again, UCLA should be the favorite. The Bruins took the conference crown last season with an 18-0 record (34-1 overall), but were knocked out of the NCAA Tournament by eventual champion Texas.

Stanford will once again challenge the mighty Bruins, and a rebuilt Washington team, along with California and the Ducks, should make up the upper division of this year's race.

The Bears had a great recruiting season, pulling in 6-1 outside hitter Lynn Patrick and talented transfer Jackie Cook from Nebraska.

With former Oregon assistants Debbie Buse and Steve Nimocks now running the show in Seattle, the Huskies could surprise with a top three finish.

Arizona and Arizona State will be tough as always, and Washington State and Oregon State, former Pac-10 cellar-dwellers, will even give the top teams a run for their money.

Taking into consideration what happened last season, Oregon would be pleased with just an upper division finish, but take one look at this year's team poster, and it's easy to tell that the Ducks have just one thing on their mind.

"I think it shows you have to be this tough to make it in the Pac-10," Krebsbach said. "It shows that 'don't take us for granted,' or 'don't think that we're easy,' because we're not gonna be."
