Hunter Continued from Page 1

Hunter's involvement in political and community activities have provided her with a strong knowledge of politics and group processes, which will benefit her contribution to the ASUO, she said.

Along with her political background, Hunter has a strong sense of the Eugene community and the important role of the University in the area.

"The University is a big part of the community image of Eugene and Springfield, and it's also a community within itself," she said.

As for her own personal goals, Hunter said she hopes to see a continuation of the programs and activities provided for students. She also hopes that students will work to initiate new programs that are not currently provided but would benefit the university, she said.

"I have sensed a real commitment from students to try to implement programs that are important to them," said Hunter. "I like that honesty and commitment to ideals."

Hunter said she would like to see the continuation of strong support for student groups by the ASUO, and she is positive the ASUO will continue to work for the benefit of the student groups when setting their goals.

Also, she said she hopes the IFC will continue to handle money responsibly when funding the important programs for students, she said.

Although she is new to the University and the ASUO, Hunter said she is eager to become involved in the goals of the executive officers and the University as a whole.

She is certain the framework of the ASUO and her personal diverse background in politics will allow her to make a smooth transition into the part of the university community, she said.

"It's nice to be back on a university campus," said Hunter. "I'm still learning all the faces, but I'm going to enjoy it here."
