Encore!

The Chilean group Inti-Illimani, whose members play more than 20 string, percussion and wind instruments, will perform Wednesday evening.

Chilean group reflects struggle

It has been 15 years since Chile has seen even the faintest trace of democracy, and one group has been singing its way through those years in support of the Chilean struggle for liberty.

Inti-Illimani, a folkloric music ensemble, will perform Wednesday night at 7 in the EMU Ballroom. This will be one of their last American concerts before they return to Chile for the long-awaited Chilean elections in December that signify the reinstatement of democracy.

Formed in 1967, Inti-Illimani's music is a compilation of Latin American folkloric and popular rhythms and the poetry of contemporary Chilean writers.

The seven-man band plays more than 20 string, percussion and wind instruments which create "beautiful harmonies that are very emotional," said Eddie Beanes, director of MEChA, the Chicano student union.

In 1973, during the overthrow of the Chilean democracy, Inti-Illimani was exiled from their country and was not able to return until September 1988.

Because they became victims of the democratic overthrow, their music reflects the Chilean struggle. "They took political happenings and turned them into music," Beanes said. "Their music is a yearning for the hope of the future."

With the Chilean return to democracy this December, the hope in their music has actually become the reality.

"They sing for human rights and for justice for all people, especially for the Chilean people," said David Salem, co-director of the Latin American Support Council (LASC).

"The concert will be a historical occasion for Oregon and Oregonians because we've been working for 15 years to see Chile return to democracy," Salem said. "Since they will be going back to a democratic Chile, we may not see Inti-Illimani again."

"It's not just going to be a concert, it's going to be a confrontation of the emotions," Beanes said. "The message of their music and this concert is that 'the people united will never be defeated'."

Tickets are available at the EMU Main Desk, the Hult Center, LASC (EMU Suite 1), Balladeer Music and La Tienda. Advanced tickets sell for $6 students and $8 general while at-the-door tickets are $7.50 students and $9.50 general.
