Committee OKs child care request

By Alice Thornton
Emerald Reporter

The Incidental Fee Committee approved a request for a special allocation from the Child Care Task Force and the EMU, and also accepted the goals and purposes of the Student Insurgent in a Tuesday night meeting.

The allocation of $10,211 will cover the 1988-1989 deficit of the ASUO child care subsidy that resulted from an increase in the number of eligible families.

Inaccurate estimations of winter and spring subsidy costs and several accounting errors in the EMU also contributed to the deficit.

The task force did not want to see the money carried as an EMU deficit.

The IFC considered this an "acute emergency" when moving to allocate $8,000 from unallocated funds and $2,211 from surplus funds.

"It was very hard to estimate how far money would go last year," said Priscilla Warren, chair of the ASUO Child Care Task Force.

The IFC also unanimously approved an amendment to the child care subsidy contract that allows any exception to the contract be made on a case by case basis.

Members of the IFC also unanimously accepted the goals and purposes of the Student Insurgent which will allow it to receive future funds from incidental fees.

Robert Kenneth, the paper's publisher, said publications such as the Commentator provide precedent at the University for funding such a newspaper.

Kenneth said the Student Insurgent is hoping for a 1991 budget from the IFC.

The newspaper is currently relying on donations and increasing advertisements from student organizations and local small businesses.

ing one's own evil inclinations, base desires and temptations on an individual basis, Siddiqui said.

The second aspect is military action for self-defense and the removal of tyranny, Siddiqui said, adding that Jihad also indicates a struggle against the evil and corruption of society.

Siddiqui said there are two legitimate purposes of Jihad for military action. The first is "to defend your own life, honor, beliefs, property (or) country," and to carry arms for self-defense of these rights.

The second purpose is "to remove tyranny and oppressive systems," Siddiqui said. This also extends to assisting others asking for help against tyranny, according to the Koran.

"There are very few people who would disagree that any act of senseless aggression against innocent people," including hijack, murder of innocent civilians and public bombings, are defensible, Siddiqui said.

"Islam emphasizes the best means: Don't use harsh action when unnecessary," Siddiqui said, adding there are clear Koranic injunctions against wanton destruction in the event of military conflict.

A question and answer period followed the presentation, and the almost 100 students asked Siddiqui questions about the Palestinian uprising, the death sentence against author Salman Rushdie, and Western portrayals of Jihad and other aspects of Islamic culture.

Drugs

"The most important thing that I have to say is that, in a way, I hold myself accountable because I thought I knew about drugs," said Hughes' mother, Sandra Bennett.

Bennett filed a wrongful death suit in 1987 against the University and the Theta Chi Fraternity that was settled out of court this summer.

The University agreed to work with Bennett in preventing illegal drug use by students and to implement additional drug-counseling programs.

Theta Chi settled for an undisclosed monetary amount.

"The reason we filed the lawsuit is because we had no knowledge that drugs were being used to that extent," Bennett said. "It is no longer a minority, but a majority of kids experimenting with drugs."

Bennett said parents of students need to be more aware of drug use signs, and that parent participation can be an important prevention method.

Shirley Wilson, dean of students, and Gerard Moseley, vice provost for academic support and student services, were
