New prizes for UO undergraduate and graduate students:

Humanities Center Essay Prizes

1990 Theme: The Natural Environment & Human Values

The University of Oregon Humanities Center announces new annual essay prizes for UO undergraduates and graduate students. All students are invited to submit an original essay or other piece of work on the annual theme. The Humanities Center expects to award one prize for the best essay by an undergraduate and one prize for the best essay by a graduate student. The prizes each will provide $250.00, and the awards will be announced in the University commencement program and the Humanities Center Newsletter. In addition, the Humanities Center will assist prize recipients who want to pursue publication of their essays.

Further information about the annual theme, and guidelines and a required cover sheet for submissions are available now in the Humanities Center; interested students should pick up this information as soon as possible. The deadline for the 1990 Humanities Center Essay Prizes is 1 March 1990. Final decisions will be announced by 2 April 1990.

ing out their counterparts in a battle of the bands competition.

In the background, lights from the cameras of television reporters broadcasting live for their evening newscasts would sporadically pop up, resulting in camera crashers flocking to the nearest camera, waving their green and gold pompons while shouting Duck victory salutes.

"We're here to celebrate the event Rich Brooks worked hard to achieve," said Chris Abbott, one of the many Oregon alumni in the midst of the action.

The Duck fest concluded with the featured performance of Otis Day and the Knights, remembered as the frat band in Animal House, a movie filmed at the University.

By the end of the night, Day was singing "Shout," wearing a Independence Bowl T-shirt and sporting a Duck hat. There were few remaining Tulsa fans left at the event, but the Oregon fans had stayed late.
