

NCAA slices basketball games

DALLAS (AP) — The NCAA voted Tuesday to slice three games off the basketball season and reveal each school's graduation rate for athletes, but its efforts to reform big-time college sports almost tripped over the starting line.

The convention was more like a labored, confused chess match than a Final Four thriller as it took five ballots and four hours of parliamentary wrangling and power struggles to kill, then revive and finally pass the reduction in basketball games, which begins with the 1992-93 season.

That measure was labeled a "watershed" in the NCAA Presidents Commission effort to reform big-time athletics and relieve pressure on athletes. It was favored as a move to give athletes more time for study, but opposed as a costly cash crunch for schools, which could lose up to $1.5 million per year.

"This is the most important thing at this convention," pleaded Greg O'Brien, president of the University of New Orleans, after the basketball cuts crashed in flames on its first vote.

"It is a signal of great importance beyond this room ... that reforms are going forward," O'Brien said.

"It was not a pretty victory. It was a messy victory, but I think we got it done," Wake Forest president Thomas Hearn, like O'Brien a member of the Presidents Commission, said after the final vote.

The NCAA delegates also approved compromise cuts in spring football practice, reducing practice days from 20 to 15, and limiting contact drills to 10 of those days.

The Presidents Commission had proposed halving spring football to 10 days and eliminating contact drills altogether in the spring.

But the hardest-fought battle was over the basketball cuts, which included a compromise measure restoring exemptions to the 25-game limit for preseason tournaments, and moving the start of preseason practice to Nov. 1 from Oct. 15.

The three-game cut was defeated initially on a vote that put it off until next year's convention. Schools said they could lose up to $250,000 per year from three fewer basketball games — too much, some athletic directors said, for the NCAA to sacrifice for library-time for athletes.

Indiana athletic director Haydn Murray estimated the Hoosiers would lose $600,000 per year.

Jake Crouthamel, athletic director at Syracuse, which seats 32,000 in its Carrier Dome and leads the nation in attendance, said he wouldn't say how much his school would lose beyond "a lot." But a source close to the program estimated three fewer home games could set Syracuse back $1.5 million.

"It's big money sorely needed," said Brad Hovious, athletic director at Texas-El Paso. "Two or three basketball games can pay for three or four non-revenue sports."

The difficulty in winning approval for the cuts in athletic commitments cut to the heart of the battle within the NCAA over whether to de-emphasize athletics.

The three-game basketball cut was killed in Division I by a 170-150 vote to refer it to the 1991 convention, but revived on a 165-156 vote and eventually approved, 206-116.

Coaches violated rules, says NCAA investigation

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The NCAA says Clemson football coaches violated recruiting rules more than a dozen times and gave players up to $150 in cash from 1984 to 1988, according to a report released Tuesday.

The school released the report four days after receiving it, but eliminated all references that might allow those named in the 15-page document to be identified. The NCAA is prohibited from publicizing its allegations, but allows schools to release the information.

In a written statement, Clemson president Max Lennon said the school would "take all appropriate steps to protect the integrity of the university." Lennon was at the NCAA convention in Dallas and could not be reached for further comment.

If Clemson is found guilty of the violations, the school could be placed on probation for the second time in eight years. Clemson was given two years probation in 1982 for 70 violations that occurred between 1976 and 1982 under Charlie Pell and Danny Ford, who has been the Tigers' coach since December 1978.

This time, the NCAA is accusing Clemson of 14 violations, including cash payments to players and recruits by coaches and boosters. The payments allegedly ranged from $15 to $150.

The report also accuses Clemson coaches of making a total of 11 improper recruiting contacts with high school juniors and a sophomore between November 1984 and September 1987. The NCAA doesn't allow college coaches to recruit players in person until they have completed their junior year in high school.

According to the report, Clemson coaches also violated NCAA rules by contacting two recruits more than three times each during the 1985-86 academic year. The report also claims that in 1987 an athletic department representative improperly contacted a recruit and was encouraged by a coach to call the player on the telephone; a recruit was given a sweatshirt and T-shirt by a member of the Bengal Babes, a group of female students who help recruit players; and a coach gave a player $20 to serve as a host for a recruit.
