DeSouza denied track eligibility

Jose deSouza, Oregon's top shot putter and discus thrower, will not be granted a fourth year of track eligibility this season.

Men's coach Bill Dellinger received word via a conference call Wednesday afternoon that the two-time all-American in both events has had his appeal denied by the NCAA.

DeSouza, a native from Brazil, accepted money from a track club when he first came to Eugene in 1985. Although he later repaid all of the money to the club, the NCAA ruled deSouza would have to forfeit a year of eligibility as a result.

Dellinger said that Oregon will have other chances to appeal deSouza's case, but it seems unlikely the decision will be overturned.

In other track news, sprinter Klaus Weigeldt will return to the team this season while distance runner Colin Dalton will redshirt this season.

Weigeldt returned to his native West Germany after last season to resume studying law. Weigeldt, who had the team's best marks in the 200 and 400 meter dashes last year, will return to Oregon in the spring.

Dalton had already redshirted this fall in cross country while staying in his native Australia to train for the Commonwealth Games. On the track, Dalton was an all-American in the 1,500 meters last year. He will have one year of track eligibility and two cross country seasons left when he returns to Oregon.

Ken Kesey and the members of his Creative Writing class have accomplished something that has never been done before in the annals of academia. They have written a book together and it has been published.

CAVERNS is a rollicking tale which takes the reader from the streets of San Francisco to the desert mountains of Utah to the steps of the Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake City. It is destined to become a cult classic.
