

Tennis team boasts two standouts

By Cam Sivesind

University Seniors James Hazard and Jon Weinberg are prime examples of what kind of tennis players Oregon has on its tennis team.

Hazard, cumulating a 3.90 grade point average in four years at Oregon, and Weinberg with a 3.95 GPA, are standouts both on and off the court.

They were two of four Oregon players named to the Volvo Tennis Scholar-Athlete team.

The 22-man All-America squad award is given under the following criteria: a junior standing or above, a GPA of 3.5 or higher, and the person must be a varsity member of the tennis team.

A native of Australia, Hazard is the Ducks' No. 3 player this year. Balancing tennis and school is something Hazard, a pre-med major, does not have trouble with.

"Tennis organizes my time really well," Hazard said. "Otherwise, I'd be watching TV or something. The fact that I've got practice, I know when I come home I've got to start work because I haven't got much time."

Weinberg, the Ducks' No. 4 player, agrees with Hazard.

"For me, tennis and studies go together. Both force you to set your time aside," he said. "Tennis gives you an outlet from studying and then you can go back and do what you want to do."

Hazard is a real asset to the team. Oregon coach Buzz Summers said.

"He gives our team a lot of stability and he's a very hard conscientious worker," Summers said. "He has a lot of tennis talent and kids respect him because he's a solid person."

Weinberg, a pre-business major, gets praise from Summers as well.

"He is a very hard hitter and is very aggressive," Summers said. "He doesn't say much but he's really very emotionally involved in every a match. He puts out 100 percent every time."

The season so far has been less than spectacular for Oregon. The Ducks are 1-7 this year with their only win coming against UC-Santa Barbara in mid-January.

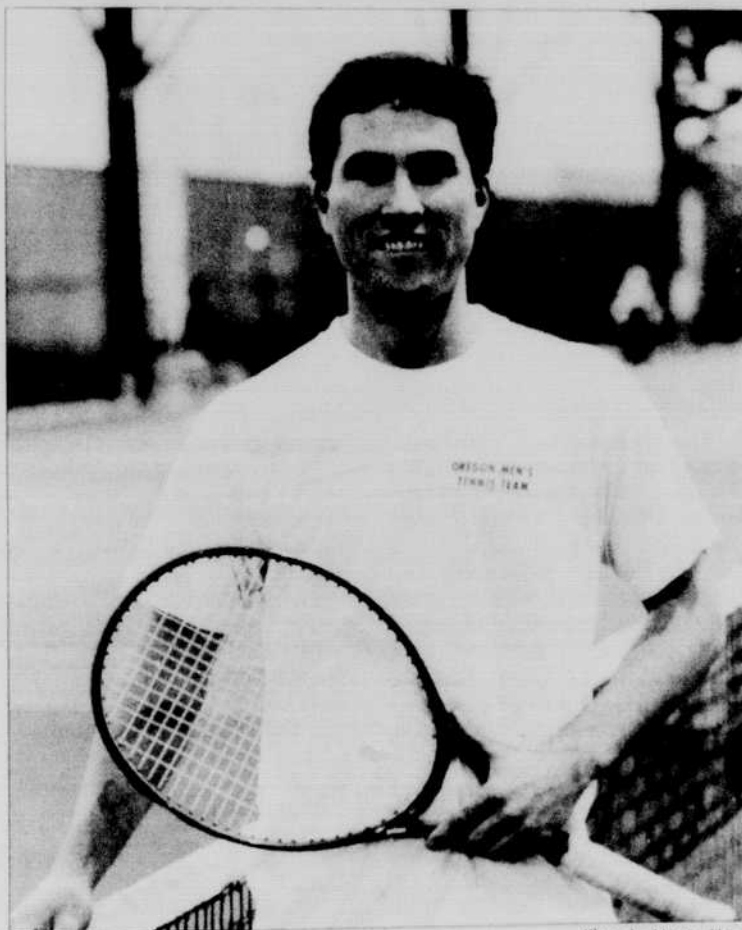

Injuries and sickness have taken a toll so far this year. Hazard missed four matches this year and has compiled a 1-5 singles record. He is 2-4 in doubles with his partner and No. 1 singles player Kevin Cory.

Weinberg, a right-hander, has a 4-7 singles record with a 2-7 doubles count with his partner and No. 2 singles player Ted Rubin.

Neither player is making excuses for his record. It has just been a matter of tough competition, although the Ducks have not had a completely healthy team for their dual meets.

"I think it's nothing to get worried about," Hazard said, "because we turned that around last year."

"Once you lose you've got to get over it," Weinberg said. "You can think about what you did and maybe work on it, but you can't think about losing."

Jon Weinberg maintains a steady tennis game as well as a 3.95 GPA at Oregon.
