Windows shot out

Someone shot out three windows of the University law school with a 12-gauge shotgun early Wednesday morning.

Officers from the Eugene Police Department and Campus Security went to the law school building after an EPD officer in the area heard shots being fired at about 5:30 a.m.

The three windows looked out of the school's admissions office, and they were replaced by midday. No injuries were reported.

No suspects were seen near the windows, but a red Toyota Tercel was seen leaving the area in an unknown direction.

Correction

A story in Tuesday's Emerald incorrectly reported the date for University Day. The correct date is May 19. The Emerald apologizes for any inconvenience this may have caused.

Unique collections needed for exhibit

By Julie Decker
Emerald Contributor

Do you have an obsession for collecting the odd and unusual? Are you a permanent fixture at garage, yard and estate sales? Are you constantly looking for that one perfect item to round out that collection?

If so, Will White and Karen Bubb, co-directors of the EMU Gallery, would like to talk to you.

Beginning March 26, the EMU Gallery will open an exhibition titled, "Obsessive/Retentive," featuring the collecting obsessions of people in the community, but with an unusual twist.

"We want to take a light-hearted approach to how and what we see visually by showing what different people have," White said. "The purpose of the exhibit is to express different opinions in what people find appealing."

Collections have always been a popular hobby for many people. Children and adults collect items ranging from stamps to baseball cards to butterflies. White is not looking for typical collections, however, but wants to focus on the unusual.

Many people have saved things for years, filling shelves and shoe boxes with items few others have thought to keep. Often the items are placed on display, but viewers are limited.

This exhibit offers people the chance to proudly show their collections to a captive audience and to share their odd pieces among other uncommon collectibles.

White has been looking for people with unusual collections for the exhibit during the past few months, and he has received many phone calls and applications from people with odd collections.

White is interested in people with numerous items rather than one unusual object that they have kept. He has received a wide range of offers, from people with glassware collections to someone who has saved several years' worth of toenail clippings.

White said he has talked to people with Smurf collections, salt and pepper shakers, ceramic bumblebees and more.

At this point, no final decisions have been made as to which odd and unusual collections will appear in the exhibit, and White is still looking for others with unusual obsessions.

The exhibit is not limited in any way. All collections will be considered, and the more odd and unusual the collection, the more this exhibit may be for you.

If you are obsessive/retentive and would like to share your collection in this light-hearted exhibition, the deadline for application is Friday, March 1.

For an application or more information contact White or Bubb at 346-4000 or stop by the Student Activities Resource Office in Suite 2 of the EMU.
