ate race in Wyoming in '88, for some specific examples,'' Mc-Guire said. "It's a tactic they employ: they're never going to admit it."

Berkman insisted. "There's no substance to that statement whatsoever."

Kinney said he believes Goldschmidt's decision not to seek re-election had nothing to do with the rumors

"Goldschmidt saw Dave's fundraising ability .... He saw the handwriting on the wall and that it was going to be a tough race," Kinney said. "So, he dropped out."

McGuire refused to believe that Frohnmayer's money influenced Goldschmidt's choice to withdraw.

"My personal belief is: That made the decision to drop out even tougher," he said. "Knowing Neil, I believe a good fight would keep him in rather than scare him off." Roberts said.

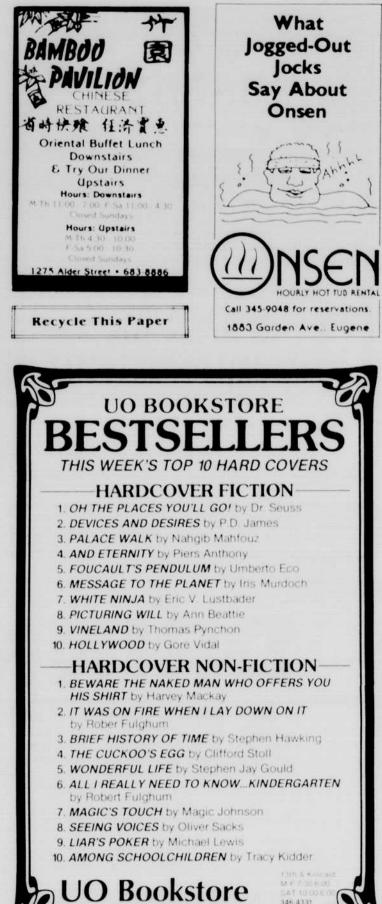

"I think there's a saturation point in the Oregon media so that even if $2 million was added. it wouldn't matter." she said

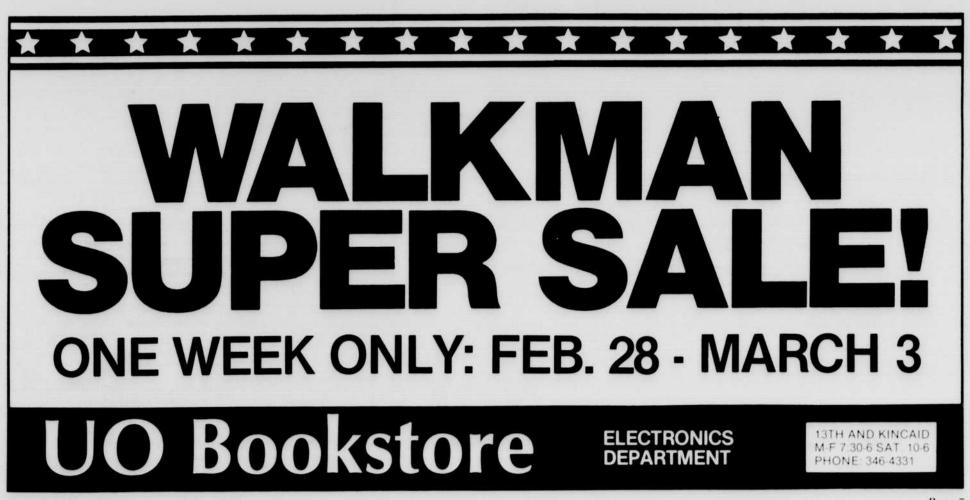

In addition to the Republican Party's financial aid. Frohmmayer's campaign will be assisted by visits from President George Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle, according to Berkman

"The president will be in Oregon ... maybe even before the primary." Berkman said.

Hering denied that Goldschmidt's decision to drop from the race made Frohumayer's campaign easier. "A Republican race is never a cinch in Oregon where Democrat voters ontnumber Republican voters three to two." he said

"Dave wants this race badly, and regardless of who's running in the race. Dave is going to give 110 percent to win."
