Dix to quit majority leader post

SALEM (AP) — State Rep. David Dix of Eugene announced Tuesday that he'll step down as majority leader of the Oregon House.

Dix has taken political heat in recent months because of deficiencies in the House Democrats' reporting of campaign expenditures and contributions.

His former top aide, Carl Wiederaenders, was found guilty of tampering with a public campaign document Monday and was fined $2,500.

At a news conference Tuesday, Dix said the past six months have been "brutal" for him, his friends and his family.

"I'm tired, unfortunately, too tired to sustain the level of energy necessary for me to do the kind of job as majority leader that I would demand of myself," he said.

He said he hasn't decided yet whether he'll run for another House term. He has to decide by next Tuesday, which is the candidate filing deadline for the May 15 primary election.

Dix said he is calling a caucus meeting at the Capitol Monday to choose a new majority leader.

After reading his statement, he left the news conference without answering any questions.

As late as Monday, after Wiederaenders' court session, Dix had told reporters he planned to stay at the caucus helm.

Rep. Peter Courtney, D-Salem, said he discussed the matter with Dix by telephone late Monday and that he believes Dix reached the point where he thought he was hurting the caucus.

"David feels that by removing himself now that any of the baggage associated with this he's taking with him," Courtney said.

Courtney said he's interested in the majority leader position. Rep. Bruce Hugo, D-Scappoose, who narrowly lost to Dix in 1989, said he's considering making another bid for the job.

Wiederaenders was convicted of taking a page last September from a caucus campaign finance report on file with the secretary of state. He claimed the act was unintentional.

The incident was a factor in Secretary of State Barbara Roberts' decision to audit Democratic campaign finance reports.

Deficiencies in the reports resulted in her imposing fines totaling more than $65,000 against three Democratic organizations, including a $34,000 penalty against the House Democratic caucus fund for under-reporting of donations.

Dix was held personally liable for $23,872 of a $27,179 fine against the Majority Fund, which Roberts said failed to report more than $16,000 in donations.

Postal authorities also are investigating the caucus' use of the state Democratic Party bulk mailing permit for some campaign material mailed in the 1988 elections.

Democratic leaders said the caucus needs to reorganize itself smoothly with election season at hand.

"There is work to be done, and we are prepared to meet that challenge," said House Speaker Vera Katz, D-Portland. She said she regretted Dix's decision.

His move comes as the Democrats expect a pitched battle to retain control of the House, which they now rule by a 32 to 28 count.

Bartlett Continued from Page 1

Bartlett said the United States can learn from Asian economies about the ability to cooperate in large-scale organization over long distances for long periods of time.

People must bury their differences and work together in political, economic and community terms.

"If we don't it will be one of the tests our society has failed, and I suspect we will get what we deserve," he said.

The Metropolitan Partnership invited Bartlett to speak at the annual meeting because his position as higher education chancellor allows him to influence the quality of people enter-ting the work force, said Gayle Stauffer, marketing and business development manager for the partnership.

"He has the power to affect the future work force of the state," she said.

The partnership was founded in 1985. It is funded equally by public and private funds. Stauffer said.

Its goal is to assist local existing industry and to recruit new industry to the EugeneSpringfield area.

The partnership is a facilitator for other programs that help businesses with needs such as expansion, addition of employees and training programs.
