

Safety measures, Oberhue said, such as having three security guards, having non-drinking monitors and alternative food and beverages at functions held by chapters, are made more enforceable with the new policy.

Shauna Wager, Panhellenic Tribunal chairwoman, said the old policy had a lot of "loose holes" which were hard for the Tribunal to govern. She feels the new policy is not so abstract.

"It's either yes or no," Oberhue said. "Do they have three security monitors, yes or no? Do they have non-drinking monitors, yes or no? Is it BYOB (bring your own booze), yes or no?"

Oberhue explained that the new policy will enable the Tribunal to take a stronger stand to enforce the new rules.

"The IC is looking out for the interest of the chapters. I am more concerned about the live-hood of a chapter as opposed to a member," Oberhue said. "In other words, I would rather see a member get a citation than a whole chapter being closed down."

The IC has also focused on academics in its revision of the policy.

Fraternities must get above a 2.65 GPA among the whole house, or they lose half of their social functions for the term. Each fraternity is allotted six social functions each term, and if the 2.65 GPA is not reached, the chapter loses three of its functions.

"This is done both as an incentive and as a punishment," Oberhue said. "Fraternities shouldn't have the privilege of socializing all term if they don't have adequate grades."

Oberhue said the old GPA standard was 2.25. Oberhue said this change would have affected three fraternities last term. "We're not saying no drinking, but we are saying to be responsible for the drinking that is done," Oberhue said.

"This policy is just one step in a much longer progression. Next term we want to get a joint social policy, by combining the Panhellenic and IC Tribunal chairs. The idea is that it's not just a fraternity issue, but a Greek issue, and it should involve sororities too."
