Arabs and Jews," he said. "They weren't able to conclude any crystal-clear victory for anyone."

Atashi said peace can be achieved when one party has completely destroyed or subdued the other. Israel has not been able to defeat the Palestinians militarily or politically, he said.

"The Israelis have not been able to subdue the Arabs, and the Arabs have not been able to defeat the Israelis," Atashi said, adding that most Israelis realize they cannot win the war.

Business negotiations would be the best method of establishing some sort of conclusion in the Middle East, Atashi said. Wars do not create a peaceful atmosphere, even when there is a clear victory, he said.

"Making peace is just like making war," Atashi said. "Peace is risky, and war is risky, but a chance to establish understanding is much greater through peace."

Atashi said Israelis must recognize the Palestinian right of self-determination before any concessions can be made. Some Israeli extremists will not talk to PLO representatives, he said. "Without talking to the PLO, we cannot proceed or establish any solution," Atashi said. "This causes so many delays in negotiations."

Atashi said if the Arabs make genuine peace with Israel, the country might be willing to withdraw from the occupied territories.

tions, he said.

In previous years, many candidates took advantage of donated copy machines to print campaign materials. Such contributions must now be recorded.

"We want to know this year where the money is coming from," Coulter said.

The board will pay special attention to student groups who donate their dollars to particular candidates. Groups may give money to a multitude of political campaigns; however, the contribution cannot be made from funds from the Incidental Fee Committee, Coulter said.

In addition, candidates must keep an accurate record of their expenses to the nearest dollar, rather than the nearest ten dollars, as required in the past. All candidates are requested to submit receipts for their expenditures, Coulter said.

Aside from ensuring fair elections, the elections board's primary mission is to increase voter turnout, Dodge said. But due to what Dodge describes as a "tremendous budget crunch," the organization will have to work even harder to get voters' attention this year, he said.

Last year the IFC chipped in the extra $2,000 it took to fund elections, he said. This year the IFC has no reserves, and the board is limited to its allocated $5,000.

"Our duty is to educate students," Coulter said. "And let them know they have control. A lot of people think this money goes here, and you can't do a lot about it."

The University collects the highest incidental fees in the nation at $89 per term, he said.

The board plans to combat student apathy by visiting classrooms and student organizations to stress the importance of voting. An additional voting booth will be added between Hamilton and Bean Complex, Coulter said, bringing the total to seven.

Only 21 percent of the student body voted in last year's elections, he said.
