The Oregon women's track team has two non-scoring meets behind it and is preparing for its first dual meet of the year against Washington and Idaho Saturday in Seattle.

The Ducks opened the season with the annual Oregon Preview at Hayward Field two weeks ago.

Senior Liz Wilson, who sat out the fall cross country season because of a stress fracture. clocked a 4:26.0 in the 1,500-

"Liz looks like she's where she used to be," said Oregon women's coach Tom Heinonen of Wilson's return.

Wilson placed seventh in both the 3,000 and 5,000 at last year's NCAA meet.

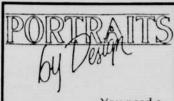

Sophomore Kim Hyatt had an impressive 169-8 effort in the javelin while junior teammate Paula Berry had a 168-4 effort.

'(Hyatt) is way ahead of where she was last year." Heinonen said. "Paula Berry seems ready for her best college vear.

Kamala Kohlmeier was impressive in the 100 hurdles notching a 14.50 and a second place finsh. Kohlmeier finished third in the long jump with a 17-91/4 leap.

Freshman Karen Weidmann grabbed second in the long jump with a 17-1014 mark.

Oregon has one of its youngest teams ever this season, and the likelihood of having to depend on freshman for scoring is
