

RAGING

There's nothing to do but hang on tight when you're poised on the edge of a 20-foot waterfall on California's Tuolumne River.

RAPIDS

Eric Spino Photographs by George Olson

This is the only rapid that really weirds me out. Shannon Wiere said as we approached Clavey Falls. Coming from the leader of our rafting trip down the Tuolumne (too-WAL-uh-me) River in Northern California, that didn't exactly inspire confidence among the rest of us. Especially when she added that it wasn't really the 20-foot falls you had to worry about, it was the hole—a mass of ferocious, churning water on the left side after you went over