Incidental Fee Committee candidate Josonja Watson said she would like to see more money spent on student groups that serve the entire University

Tve always felt the EMU and athletic department get entirely too much money and you can't see what their spending it on." said Watson, who is running for a one-year seat. "I believe student organizations should get more money because they support all the students

'Having the athletic (department) get money is fine and all the things happening in the EMU are great, but I just think if student programs need the help the IFC should try their best to give them that help." Watson said.

philosophy on Watson's budgeting is to "spend wisely." she said.

"If the you can keep track of every cent and where it's going that should do it," she said. Watson said she believes this is why the IFC has a deficit.

They should've took a look at last year's student budgets and used it as a guideline for this year's." Watson said. Keeping track of group programs are also important, she said. "When groups ask for money. I want to see the results that happen."

She also believes that there is a lack of communication between the IFC and student groups. She said she would make it a priority to stay in contact with groups and reassure them that they can call her at anytime.

'In my case I'd be willing to let people call me whenever they need to," Watson said.

Watson said she also plans to take between 12 to 15 credits. fall term so that she will be able to dedicate as much time to the IFC as it demands.

She said she is happy. though, with the new rule established by the IFC. The rule requires any student group to submit a written statement to the IFC if they miss their budget hearing.

Watson said student groups are fortunate that the IFC is giving them a second chance.

'If you want the program to continue, you should show up." she said

Having strong leadership skills and financial background will help Watson achieve these goals, she said.

Watson gets her leadership from her involvement with student activities. She is actively involved with the Black Student Union, the black student forum, and the planning of the Black Arts Festival in May.

Although Watson is a freshman she has had experience with finances. She worked at Viewmaster - an accounting firm in Tigard -- last summer and has taken various accounting courses in the past two vears

Watson is currently undeclared but is considering a major in marketing and advertising

Today's science career fair is not just for science majors. Future lawyers, sales representatives and public relations officers also could find work at one of more than 40 organizations represented at the fair in the EMU Ballroom from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Hospitals, medical labs, government agencies and manufacturers of scientific equipment are not looking only for job applicants with science degrees. said Larry Smith, director of Career Planning and Placement

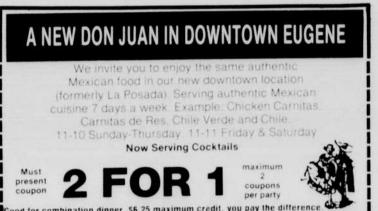

'All of these organizations need people to do administrative work, sales and public relations." Smith said.

Science majors looking for a job outside traditional fields such as medicine and university research can consult with representatives in fields ranging from publishing to the Peace Corps

A Portland company specializing in environmental cleanup and a Eugene firm that makes isotopes used to identify DNA are two examples of nontraditional job opportunities available to students interested in science, Smith said.

Students who wish to continue their education will also find information from universities and colleges at the fair.

Most organizations are at the fair to tell students about career opportunities in their fields. not to recruit students for specific positions, said Jo-Elle Hottois, a peer adviser in the University's general science department.
