Career Tracks

Steve and Jeff on the town

A Shaman's work is never done

Editor's note: The authors of this article are "star" columnists from Oregon Voice magazine. Our attempts to prod them for thought-provoking hints for making it in the real world were, as you will notice, not taken seriously by the two kilt-wearers.

Hey! Steve and Jeff here, with our official spring supplement article on career tracks. "Career tracks?" This title gets zero kilts.

What better way to get ideas for this article than to steal them from other people? We decided to have a brainstorming session disguised as a weekend bar-b-que, because so often you'll find there is a fine line between plagiarism and inspiration.

Due to the unsurprising illiteracy and lack of creativity of our guests who were just looking for a free lunch, we were slightly inspired yet mostly lulled to sleep by their ideas.

For lack of other "sources," we will list some of the ideas that we are reluctantly claiming as our own.

We thought we should start with the oldest profession in the world. And we don't mean farming. That's right, the big "P." Some benefits of this job include good pay, lack of boredom with the same sexual partner, no reason to pay taxes and no morals required.

The downside of this service-oriented profession lies in the results of a recent study which concluded that one-third of all prostitutes had the HIV virus in their systems. In this case, the big "A" outweighs the big "P," resulting in the big "D."

Let's review:

P is less than A equals D.

From humps to Trumps, we find a related profession, which is as Donald Trump's mistress. In this case the qualifications are:

- 1) Must be an attractive woman
- 2) Must have nautical knowledge (i.e., be able to hang out on a yacht)

3) Must be visible and available for exclusive interviews with the Star and the Enquirer.

4) Must be a good communicator (i.e., know when to keep your mouth shut)

Another one of our guests inspired us with the following idea: Mistaking himself to be of wit when he was actually being a twit, he suggested the highly chauvinistic idea of being a "photo negative developer for Playboy magazine. One must wonder why a person of his mentality would want to be alone in a dark room developing the prints.

The one sane idea we heard all afternoon was the aspiration to be a "shaman with great magical healing powers." This would be a great job to have. First of all, it would be highly philanthropic and you would have the cleanest conscience on earth.

Also, the magical powers would come in handy as entertainment at weddings, birthdays and bar mitzvahs. And let us not overlook the benefits of having hundreds of thousands of people worshipping the ground you walk on.

You may ask, "How can I become a great magical and mystical religious leader?" Anticipating this question, we have listed an easy, patented five-step method:

1) Get rid of all your possessions, but keep one outfit and a change of underwear. Make sure this outfit looks slick, because you and your hundreds of thousands of followers will be wearing the same thing in a few years.

2) If anyone pities you or praises you for your new-
