taught specific skills until they turn seven or eight years old. Preschools in the Soviet Union focus on art, music and dance. Soviet preschools are located all over Irkutsk, she said. Children are commonly visited by their parents when their parents have a lunch break from work. "The schools are set up to respect parent/children relationships," Plone said. The first package to arrive from Irkutsk included several advanced drawings by the Soviet preschoolers. The children at the Early Childhood Center are now busy preparing a package to send to Irkutsk. The package includes a story written by the children as a group, illustrations done by the children for the story and some Chinese lettering the children have learned from the Taiwanese students. Plone said the school will send packages to Irkutsk as often as it can. The Early Childhood Center is open to the public and is now accepting applications from parents for the fall.
