

Skype relies on Irish influences

The three-member group Skype calls its performance a blend of traditional dance music and songs from Celtic nations.

The musicians, who have been playing on and off for 20 years, utilize fiddles, guitars and citterns in their concerts. Chief influences to their performance style include John Cunningham, Kevin Burke, the Chieftans and Andy Irvine.

Skype member Michael Daly has been with the group since its inception in 1983. His background as a singer-songwriter in the folk/rock genre contributes to his innovative rhythmic accompaniments and his imaginative arrangements.

Julia Heydon, who is a vocalist, fiddler and guitarist in Skype, is also an original member of the group. Her warm fiddling style adds to the trio's full, compelling sound.

Michael Bardossi, who joined the group in 1989, has trained in both the classical and jazz styles of fiddling. Much of his music requires utilizing two fiddles.
