CLEANUP

gether soon after - while taking a campus history tour three years ago.

He and student Doug Untalan began planning in earnest last September. Sandy said he hoped to create an event that would "celebrate commonality" in the campus community, and clean up the school grounds along the way.

Coming together to clean up the campus is a cause that everyone can agree on, said ASUO President Andy Clark. "It doesn't carry a political message, just a unifying message," he said.

University Day drew participants from all corners of the University community. Sandy estimated that about 500 people chipped in, including members of the greek system, Mortar Board, the ASUO executive office and many other campus clubs and organizations, as well as professors, athletes and interested passers-by.

Business school Dean James

Reinmuth rolled up his pants and helped scrub the fountain in front of the Knight library. Sandy said, while Tim King, grounds supervisor for the Physical Plant, roamed the grounds offering advice.

Jude Ridge, a management assistant in the dean's office in the College of Education, used an old broom dipped in soapy water to scrub dirt and mildew off the white-painted Education Building, which she said had not been cleaned since it was built 10 years ago.

Sandy, Untalan, Clark, Vice Provost Gerry Moseley, ASUO officer Kirk Bailey and the Duck kicked off the effort shortly after noon by planting an atlas blue cedar in the lawn in front of Fenton Hall. A crowd of about 100 people then sang the Alma Mater to the accompaniment of the University Band before spreading out around campus and picking up their paint brushes, shovels, hoses and garbage bags.

Volunteers were rewarded with a free ice cream social and Blubinos concert Thursday evening.
