Attractive gifts for graduation include an all-expense paid vacation to an extremely exotic locale.

Gifts for grads vary in style and price

With graduation less than a week away, seniors everywhere are sighing with relief at the thought of their school days coming to an end.

In many cases, parents are just as relieved as students, and to show their appreciation, most parents will give some sort of gift to their son or daughter. Whether it be a firm handshake or a new car, every graduate can expect congratulations for their laborious years in school.

Money, a car, and trips to Europe topped the list of most wanted items. A stuffed bear with a cap and gown that says, "I'm outta here" were requested least.

Somewhere in between lies the plethora of gifts most received: pen sets, jewelry, cards, or a pat on the back. In reality, college is something we are supposed to be doing for ourselves, to further our knowledge and awareness. But it's always nice to be congratulated.

Every year about this time, the advertising blitz guarantees deals so good they are bound to attract both parents and students. Car dealerships and travel agencies hit the hardest, offering rebates and special rates for graduates.

Lincoln-Mercury, as part of a national campaign, runs full-page advertisements in most Oregon college papers, offering a $500 rebate on any new car. You have to prove you have a job, however, which may be a problem for many of seniors.

Nihar Patel, zone sales manager for Lincoln-Mercury, said there is an increase in sales between now and August. "Most college graduates get their first car soon after they secure a job," said Patel.

Many graduates said Mom and Dad will take care of the down payment, but they are on their own from there.

If making payments on a car while holding down a job sounds too much like the last four years of bills and homework, Europe might be the answer. Next to a car, a trip to Europe is one of the most
