

Rep. Smith warns of recession from owl listing

SALEM (AP) — The listing of the northern spotted owl as threatened will be the worst thing that's happened to Oregon's economy since the recession of the early 1980s, U.S. Rep. Denny Smith warned Monday.

"If you liked 1982, you're going to love 1991," the Oregon Republican said. "This is a mess for us."

Smith said his latest information is that the federal government might issue its owl listing Wednesday, an action that eventually could halt logging on millions of acres of land considered the owl's habitat.

At a news conference, Smith said the listing will devastate Oregon's timber industry as well as related industries, throwing thousands more out of work than during the recession of the early 1980s.

"It will be greater," the Republican congressman said. "This is a tragedy for people who are not able to control their destiny."

The 5th District congressman said he was pleased with the talks in which White House Chief of Staff John Sununu urged the delegation to get citizens involved in sending a clear message to Washington, D.C.

Smith said he is sponsoring "timber crisis" forums Friday in Salem and Corvallis to "give timber workers, their families, local government officials and concerned citizens the opportunity to express their frustrations and share their thoughts on how we resolve this crisis."

The Salem meeting will be at 9:30 a.m. at the Salem Armory. The Corvallis forum will be held at 2 p.m. at Corvallis High School.
