

Mandela greeted by thousands in New York parade

NEW YORK (AP) — Nelson Mandela received a hero's welcome Wednesday as he arrived for his first visit to the United States. The South African freedom fighter was feted with a ticker-tape parade, the keys to the city and an outpouring of support by nearly 1 million people.

The African National Congress leader responded with a plea for continued economic sanctions against his homeland — a theme he has sounded throughout his worldwide tour.

"We appeal to you in all humility and in all sincerity that you must join us in the internal actions that you are taking to force the government to abandon apartheid," Mandela said shortly after landing at Kennedy International Airport.

In Huntsville, Ala., President Bush reiterated that the United States would not lift economic sanctions against South Africa until that country meets the requirements of the sanctions law. Those requirements include the release of all political prisoners in South Africa.

Mandela is to meet with Bush during a later stop in Washington.

Police estimated that 350,000 people lined streets along Mandela's route from the airport, and another 450,000 turned out for the ticker-tape parade up Broadway's "Canyon of Heroes."

Mandela was greeted at the airport by dignitaries including Gov. Mario Cuomo and Mayor David Dinkins.
