

Seminar to be a 'how to' in avoiding sexual assault

In an effort to help new students develop an awareness of date rape and acquaintance rape, the University's Unwanted Sexual Behavior Task Force will present an informational seminar Thursday Sept. 20 from 6 to 8 p.m. in the EMU Walnut Room.

"How to Get What You Want Out of a Relationship, But Not More Than You Bargained For" will provide insight to incoming freshmen and transfer students about some of the sexual dangers that may be present on a college campus, said USB presentation coordinator Lindsay Reaves.

The seminar will include video presentations, interactive activities and brief, informative presentations designed to help increase knowledge of sexual assault.

The first of three videotape segments will focus on understanding the dynamics and the possibility of date rape and acquaintance rape on campus, Reaves said. The second part will discuss prevention and safety.

The final segment is geared toward "understanding the self" and helping students gain a clear definition of what their sexual limits are, she said.

In addition, representatives from several student groups and programs will be on hand to provide new students with information about where they can go and what they can do if they are sexually assaulted, or if they are in a situation where assault is possible.

The station's staff will be made up entirely of University students, who can earn academic credit for their work, January said. About 120 students have expressed interest in working at the station, he said.

January said his biggest concern in programming is to keep from duplicating KLCC and KRVM, stations known for their jazz and alternative music formats.

As far as music goes, January said he would like to see a reggae show, which he said is "not being dealt with" locally. He said there has also been interest in rap and heavy metal programming.

Two students have expressed an interest in doing a talk show, like Cable News Network's Crossfire, where an issue is presented and each host takes a side. January also hopes to have a four-line telephone hook-up installed so listeners can call in.

Students overwhelmingly endorsed a campus radio station last spring, and the IFC allocated operating funds of $25,861 for the 1990-91 school year. But January said he is hesitant to use any of those funds until the building is finished and the license is granted.

"We want to bring students face to face with the resources that are available on campus," Reaves said. "There are several different places they can go."

Project Saferide is one of the University programs participating in the seminar. Saferide is a free campus shuttle service for women who would otherwise walk alone at night.

"This is a good way to reach people in their first few days on campus," said Andrea Higgins-Evenson, Saferide director. "Several different groups on campus can be resources for them."

"When a situation occurs, the women often feels guilty,"

Reaves said. "We want to help make the stigma less powerful."

"We hope people who come to it will come away with an understanding of the rape culture that is so prevalent in our society and on campus," she said.

"Sometimes there's an attitude that a campus is a safe place. Not that it's necessarily not a safe place, but it's very easy for people to find themselves in uncomfortable situations."

USB, headed by Dean of Students Shirley Wilson, is planning more in-depth seminars on sexual assault later in the year, Reaves said.
