WHILE YOU WERE AWAY

The following is a summary of news events the Emerald covered over the summer.

The Oregon State Board of Higher Education voted June 14 to lift the enrollment caps at each of the state universities for fall term to ease growing athletic department deficits.

The action was designed as a one-year temporary "Band-Aid" for the athletic funding problem, said University President Myles Brand. Enrollment is expected to increase to 17,800 instead of decreasing as planned to 17,500.

"It was the best of a terrible set of choices facing state universities," Brand said.

Athletic department deficits at the University, Oregon State University, and Portland State University are expected to reach $5.4 million by the end of this month. The University's Athletic Department, which operates on a $10.3 million budget, has rolled up a debt of about $1.3 million, the smallest among state universities.

Single parents will be allowed to live with another adult in family housing, University President Myles Brand announced July 20.

The new policy will include unmarried couples and gay or lesbian couples with children. Under previous rules, only married couples — with or without children — and single parents living alone were eligible for family housing.

Brand said a change in policy came out of concern for "one of the most at-risk groups — single parents. We want to help facilitate their education."

The University began considering a change in policy last year when the tenant councils of Amazon and Westmoreland housing, two of the University's three family housing areas, requested a revision.

Dependent students whose parents or guardians live outside Oregon and who have not established residency will no longer qualify for in-state tuition savings under new state residency rules.

The rules, which took effect July 1, call for stiffer residency qualifications based on the state of residence of a students' parents or of their financially supportive guardians.

The new rules do not apply to students who are independent of their parents or to students who have established state residency. Out-of-state students can apply for Oregon residency after 15 months in the state.

Dependent students whose parents have moved out of state or who graduated from an Oregon high school while their parents lived out of state will no longer qualify for in-state tuition.

In-state undergraduate tuition is approximately a third of out-of-state tuition at most Oregon state colleges and universities. University students who do not qualify for in-state tuition will have to pay $1,870 per term this year, as opposed to $640 for in-state students.

The state board of higher education justified the change based on the fact that Oregon residents support state universities and colleges with their taxes, according to a state board news release. Those students supported primarily by an Oregon resident qualify for lower tuition because the state taxes paid by their parents or guardians contribute to the higher education system.

"We're trying to keep a priority on Oregon students," said Jeff Smith, associate director of school relations for the chancellor's office. "Oregon residents pay tax dollars to support Oregon colleges and universities. Out-of-state students pay an extra fee to compensate for those taxes."
