taken to it really easily, just 'boom,' and others are a little bit more set or just haven't taken the time to think about it yet.

So do you both do everything, or is there a division of tasks; do you both have areas of expertise?

Bailey: We each have some responsibilities ... but usually in terms of any decisions that have to be made, say, in terms of contracts, both of our names are on the contracts, or in terms of appointments, both of us will make a decision on an appointment.

Stickel: So far though, Kirk has done a little more of the University realm stuff just because it's in his nature because he was University affairs coordinator (1989-90). And for me, I've been focusing a lot more on the state level stuff because I've been chairing Oregon Student Lobby. And the financial stuff.

Bailey: One or the other of us will coordinate any particular project or any particular committee or something, and then just make sure that the other person is involved in any decisions that are made, or informed when something is going on.

People complain that Homecoming's no big deal here; are you trying to change that?

Bailey: It's funny. The biggest, most common thing that we heard during the end of the campaign and right as we were coming into office was that people wanted to do something for Homecoming. We talked about building some campus spirit in terms of being proud of your institution and being proud of some of the good things that happen at the University ...

So what we found is that it's tough to get anything planned for this fall, with the short time span and everything. But we're going to try to put something together, and I don't know exactly what that's going to be yet. But after that we'll try to figure out some way to cooperate with the University and get something together for the following year.

Stickel: I think this is for homecoming — President Brand challenged me (last spring) to a softball game. And the challenge has been confirmed.

Bailey: We're putting together a team, so anyone who's interested in playing softball ... seriously, we need people.

Stickel: Deceivably good players, so they don't look like ringers. Because he told us we couldn't have any ringers.

What's the first big challenge that you're facing in fall term?

Stickel: I feel like it's getting that involvement right out front, and planning for the lobbying for the Legislature, and really getting people out to the events. I think that it's going to be a challenge getting people up for Homecoming and that kind of thing.

Bailey: I think the most challenging thing about our year is going to be the legislative session, and all of the lobbying we're going to have to do. We're doing preliminary planning now and in fall we'll really get down to some nuts-and-bolts type of work, but then come January, after the governor's race, after all the elections, we're off and running.

How would you describe your office's relationship with Pres. Myles Brand and the University administration?

Stickel: Almost so good it's scary. It kind of worries me how well we get along with them.

Bailey: ... (Yes, but) that's something you kind of have to fight, because you want to be able to have a good working relationship with these people. Most of the folks that I deal with, we have a very candid relationship. On the other hand you don't want to feel like your relationship is so good you're not representing the students.

And I think Sheila and I are constantly checking each other to say, "OK, is this something we're doing because it's in the students' best interest or because the administration happens to think that's the way it should be?"

And sometimes those things do match; sometimes they don't.

Stickel: And that's the scary part, because you know there are times you could be taken advantage of ... (But) it's a good working relationship. They take us seriously and that's the most important thing — to have respect as students.

Can you talk a little bit about the Fall Symposium (A week-long event sponsored by the ASUO, to be held in October)?

Bailey: It's going to be called "The Politics of Culture" ... The symposium was sparked by the recent controversies over the Mapplethorpe and Serrano art exhibits, and the idea of culture and what is right and wrong and what is culturally acceptable. And we really want to address issues of gender and race and the arts.

Christine Craft is going to be here to address "Women in the Media." She is being brought here as part of a conference called "Images, Illusions and Identity," put on by a coalition headed up by Men Against Rape.

Stickel: And one of the big parts that we're contributing is we're bringing KRS1, who is somewhat of a controversial black activist/rap musician. He's quite a hero to a lot of people right now, so that should be really neat. And we're going to try to involve some of the black fraternities.

Bailey: It's a broad spectrum of events. We're also bringing a film from the Soviet Union and we're going to bring in some of the artists from the Soviet Union — alternative artists who, prior to '89 were underground.
