Jury deliberating in Horton case

Former student standing trial for assault

Defense counsel wrapped up its case and sent the twelve-member jury into deliberation on the third day of former Oregon football player Derek Horton's trial Thursday.

Horton is on trial for first degree sexual assault stemming from an incident that took place Jan. 5 between he and a then 18-year-old female University student.

The jury deliberated for just over an hour Thursday before deciding to return Friday for further discussion. Ten of the twelve jury members must reach a consensus decision before a verdict can be rendered.

After a brief closing statement from prosecutor Ed Hagen, Horton's attorney Kenneth Murrow completed his case and asked the jury to consider whether or not the prosecution had proven beyond a reasonable doubt that his client is guilty.

Murrow said the key weakness in the prosecution's case lies in its almost exclusive reliance on the woman's testimony. He said the prosecution has lacked sufficient evidence and testimony to convict his client of the crime.

"That's what their case has always been about," he said. "She says it happened, so just accept it."

He also reiterated inconsistencies in the woman's testimony and the testimony of other prosecution witnesses during his closing, contending that those inconsistencies are enough to cast a reasonable doubt.

Hagen closed the trial asking the jury to believe the woman's account on the basis that it had been corroborated by several witnesses and the notes of a Eugene police officer who interviewed her shortly after the incident.

He also said his client had no reason to lie and would benefit in no way by fabricating charges and seeking a conviction of Horton. Hagen asked jurors to "look into their hearts" and consider their own feelings about the reliability of the woman's testimony.

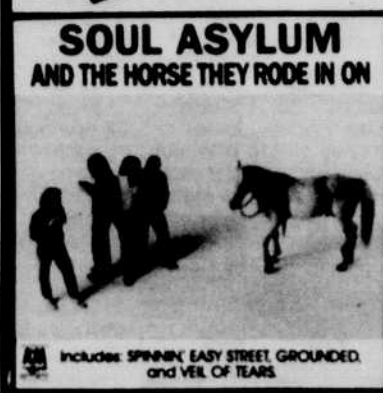

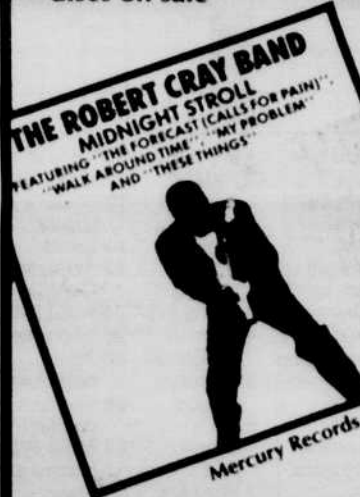

"If she was trying to make up a story, that would have been apparent ten seconds into her testimony," Hagen said.

Dedicated to my grandfather Joseph Chester Kime (Kime & Bomebrake, J.C. & E.K., Photographers, Akron.) A pioneer in color photography, he bought his wife Margaret "Peg" C. Martin Kime a Willys Knight (whose namesake W.J. Willy died with Joseph Patrick Kennedy, Jr. in 1944. Joe Jr.'s sister Kick's husband William, Marquess of Hartington also died that year. (Kick died in '48.)) He died of alcoholism in 1944 (2/2) leaving 3 children: Joseph, Janet and William (of DePere, WI and salesman for Employers' Insurance of Wausau (dec'd. '86 leaving 3 children).

Also to W.E. Wright (son of Christina Eichenberger) who helped his brother C. Nelson, whose son Richard B. was born 10/16/28, found Wright Tool & Forge Co., in Barberton, OH in 1927 before his death on Nov. 18, 1929. Nelson always kept an oil portrait of W.E. at the top of the front stairs in his home (as well as a pair of antique dueling pistols atop the grey metal cabinet in his upstairs office there). He died Easter Sunday, 1972 and his wife Inez died later that same year. (Bill was visiting us when the call she had died came. I still remember the indentation in her forearm where a length of bone had been removed after she had fallen from her bicycle years earlier.)
