Speaker to discuss U.S.'s role in environment

Oxford-educated Myers will examine economic impact of environmental actions

By Carrie Dennett

Internationally renowned environmental scientist Dr. Norman Myers will speak on campus today about "The U.S. Stake in the Global Environment." The lecture will look at the character and extent of American economic and security interests in environmental factors around the world

Myers, educated at Oxford University and the University of California at Berkley, has been a consultant on the environment and development for more than 80 countries. He lived and worked in Kenya for 25 years as a consultant for Great Britain.

Myers has undertaken projects for the U.S. State Department, the World Bank, United Nations agencies and the World Wildlife Fund.

Myers has developed a detailed understanding of the intricate balance necessary to sustain life on this planet. His expertise includes rain-forest resources, gene-pool preservation and the greenhouse effect.

He has traveled widely around the world to observe development projects that combine economic growth with environmental protection in ways that are sustainable.

The lecture reviews the findings of a lengthy policy analysis for the World Resources Institute in Washington, D.C. He will discuss the main forms of environmental problems, including tropical deforestation, mass extinction of species, toxic waste, the depletion of the ozone layer and the greenhouse effect.

Myers will also cover foreign-policy implications of the links between economic slowdown, security, and environmental factors in many parts of the world, including the Philippines, Central America and Mexi-

Myers is the author of more than 200 papers published in academic and scientific journals, and and equal number in the popular press. He has also published several books on subjects ranging from the growing extinction of species to the destruction of tropical rain forests.

The lecture will take place in Room 150 Columbia at 7:30 p.m. There is no admission charge, but the lectures presenters say a dollar donation would be appreciated.
