The program's nine staff members use a multicultural curriculum, stressing tolerance, sensitivity and students' own life experiences. Marks-Fife said.

Almost 40 percent of the students have gone on to universities or colleges, he said, according to 1988-89 statistics. An additional 40 percent have gone back to the job market,

With a graduation rate of more than 85 percent, Marks-Fife said the students themselves make the program successful.

"I've found people waiting for me here at 8 a.m. who know the value of education, but just haven't had the opportunity. They are very motivated," he said.

Oscar Hernandez, a recruiter and promoter for the University HEP program, said he travels all over the state seeking candidates for the program.

"It's my mission to talk about the program. To me it's not just a job. I believe in it," Hernandez said.

Hernandez himself is a graduate of the program, and has almost completed a bachelor's degree in political science and psychology at the University.

"The only limitation is how much desire people have to commit to school," Hernandez said.

The program will be receiving some well-deserved attention, Hernandez said, when University President Myles Brand visits Nov. 13. Hernandez said he hopes Brand will see the buildings and realize the need for better facilities for the program.

"Our presence has been ignored," he said. "I think that will change in the future."
