Regionally

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Oregon Senate Democrats on Monday elected John Kitzhaber of Roseburg to a fourth term as Senate president.

The Democrats also picked Bill Bradbury of Bandon to serve again as Senate majority leader when the 1991 Legislature convenes in January.

At a news conference, Kitzhaber said the Democratic-controlled Senate will be able to work with Republicans who will have control of the Oregon House for the first time in two decades.

Kitzhaber said he thinks House Republicans will act responsibly in coming up with a plan to replace money schools will lose as a result of voter passage of a property tax limit in last week's election.

University puts garage plans on hold

By Bob Waite

University administrators have indefinitely postponed a plan to build a parking structure on the current site of the Alder Street tennis courts.

A recent survey of University commuters, conducted by the planning, public policy and management department, showed a demand for alternative transportation.

Planning and designing the parking garage has cost about $150,000 so far.

Administrators were influenced by the survey's findings, in addition to feedback from the surrounding neighborhood and an increase in transportation alternatives.

The University began studying ways to expand campus parking when a 1984 parking study showed the campus parking demand was 1,200 spaces greater than existing supply.

The parking garage would have added about 450 parking spaces, according to an engineering study conducted by Carl H. Buttke, a Portland transportation engineering consultant.

But campus parking demands have changed, said Jan Oliver, University assistant vice president for institutional affairs. She said 1990 studies show the greatest parking demand has shifted from the west to the east side of the University.

"We have received pressure from the neighborhood," said Dave Reinhard, city of Eugene transportation engineer. "I feel fine about the decision — and a little bit of relief. Who needs to be part of another controversy?"

Reinhard said costs to build parking garages and roads have been increasing faster than public resources, even before the passage of Ballot Measure 5. He said he believes finding lower cost alternatives to the parking garage project is fiscally responsible.

Other ideas, such as a campus shuttle service that could be linked to an Autzen Stadium park-and-ride lot, could help reduce parking demands, Reinhard said. Reinhard, Oliver and representatives from the University and the community are members of an ad hoc committee seeking ways to solve the parking shortage problem.

Oliver said that at neighborhood meetings where she presented the parking garage proposal, opposition to the idea has been intense. Alder Street neighbors have held

Archivist cares for University's treasures

Relics filed away in Fenton

In a throw-away society, Keith Richard is saving all he can.

As University archivist, Richard's realm is delineated by the campus boundaries. Things move at a pretty slow pace around west Fenton Hall.

"Well, I got a new typewriter ribbon," he said.

Getting to the archives is as intriguing as viewing its contents. One ascends a winding staircase in the semi-darkness, passing by unopened boxes covered with dust. Oil paintings of historic Eugene figures cover the wall.

Next to his desk, Richard has taped postcards of old Eugene. Fading black and white photographs and old yearbooks are falling off his chair. A yellowed piece of paper with torn corners, covered in florid script, rests on top of his desk.

Richard recently received some new materials in the mail. The children of University alumni have sent him a saucer, which bears a drawing of "Oregon State University," the campus' former name.

It is old, but does it have any legal value? Does it have any financial value? Does it have any historic value?

"If anyone's going to know this institution's history, it better be the archivist, because he's going to have to make those historic judgments," Richard said. He knows his University history, having been archivist since 1972.

Like other university archivists across the country, Richard is responsible for records management. He said they are all pretty much the same. Of course, there are some differences. Oregon laws as well as federal laws govern the keeping of records. After a faculty search, for example, the file is sent to Richard.

"By federal law I have to hold onto that for another three more years," he said. Richard also oversees personnel files, departmental correspondence, and student theses, among other items.

Students regularly use the archives for the student dissertations on file. However, Richard himself is an important resource for information. The archives are open to the public from 8:30 a.m. until noon, and 1 p.m. until 4:30, Monday through Friday.

It is a good idea to make an appointment to see Richard be-

Students to observe hunger week by fasting

By Daralyn Trappe

The Oregon Student Public Interest Research Group is recognizing National Hunger and Homelessness Week here at the University by raising awareness of these problems and raising money with a 24-hour fast.

Today from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. OSPIRG will have booths set up in the EMU Courtyard to provide information about the problems of hunger and homelessness in Lane County. At noon, Chris Schaefer of the Eugene-Springfield Homeless Action Coalition will speak.

"Our main focus is to educate, to make people aware of these problems in Lane County," said Nave Schildbach of OSPIRG.

According to Eugene Emergency Housing, about 33,000 children in Lane County experience hunger, while 61,000 county residents live below the poverty level.

Sara Dodge of OSPIRG said she hopes the events serve "as an awareness builder, so that when people talk about hunger and homelessness, they think not only of the people on 13th (Avenue), but of the families."

Those interested in taking part in a fast from 6 p.m. Wednesday to 6 p.m. Thursday can sign up in the courtyard. During that time period, participants will fast and donate the money they would have spent on food.

At 6:30 p.m. Thursday, participants will break the fast with a dinner at the Newman Center, 1850 Emerald St.

OSPIRG will collect the money and donate half to Oxfam, an international relief organization, and half to Food For Lane County, a local food bank.

Oxfam reports that 60,000 people die of hunger every day — 40,000 of them are children under the age of five.

Schildbach said about 100 University students took part last year. The annual event takes place on college campuses throughout the country, including Lane Community College, Portland State University and Lewis and Clark College.
