MEASURES

"The last story has not been written on Measure 6," he said.

The Oregon Student Public Interest Research Group at the University will also continue to work on recycling issues, despite Measure 6's loss.

Future plans for the University OSPIRG include lobbying legislators next year and forming a task force with Portland State University, Lewis and Clark College, Portland State University and Lane Community College to work on a legislative agenda, said OSPIRG Chairwoman Tanya Heikkila.

She said her group will continue to work on consumer education and awareness programs, noting that recycling issues draw the most interest on campus.

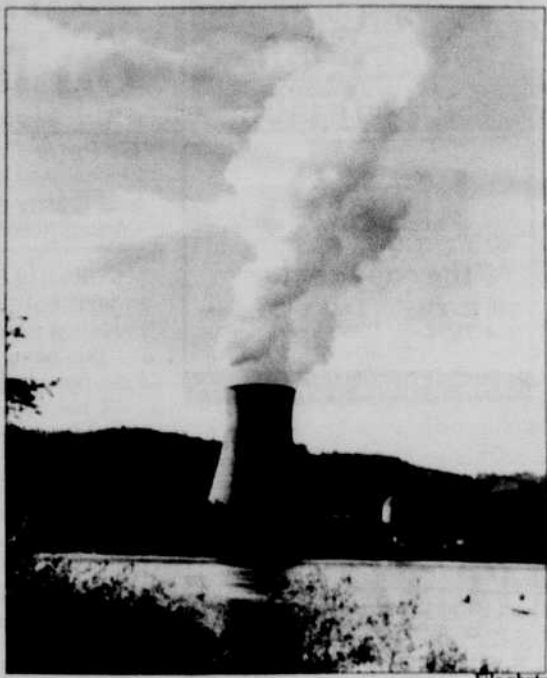

As for Measure 4's defeat, the Don't Waste Oregon Committee will continue to pursue its goals.

Lloyd Marbet, spokesman for the committee, said he does not feel good about the defeat of the initiative, believing that voters only heard one side of the issue.

But Marbet said he won't stop opposing the Trojan Nuclear Power Plant. "I don't quit (working) after an election," he said.

Marbet said that opponents, a group called PGE Opposing a Shutdown of the Trojan Electric Plant, set a campaign spending record by using the most money ever in Oregon's history to defeat a state ballot measure.

"If I had $3.5 million (the amount PGE spent). I think the outcome of this election would have been quite different," he said.

The Don't Waste Oregon Committee said it will continue to work on nuclear-related health and safety issues because the problems it wanted to address in the campaign remain unsolved. But specific plans for the future are unknown.

Holland said Johnson's status for the future was never in question in responding to some students' concerns that further disciplinary action would be taken against Johnson.

"He was not threatened, and it is our hope and expectation that he will be back for his fourth year," he said.

Johnson did say he believed homophobia within the law school played some part in the complaints and the conclusion that his actions were inappropriate.

"I can honestly say that I do believe that part of that decision had something to do with homophobia," he said.

Johnson does not blame the law school, however, saying that this type of homophobia is not intentional. "This is un-thought-out homophobia," he said. "I am excited to be sensitizing the law school to these issues."

Holland said he did not believe the law school was homophobic.

After the press conference, several students concerned with a growing anti-homosexual attitude on campus met with Brand, with Johnson present, to discuss the recent proceedings.

Brand said he will wait for the affirmative action review before making any decisions concerning the proceedings. He told the group that he does not want to act too hastily.

Some members of the group said they are concerned the recent decision sent the message that people do not only not have to tolerate homosexuality, but don't even have to tolerate a discussion of it.
