UNIVERSITY

Power to be shut off to buildings

By Bob Waite
Emerald Reporter

Much of the University will be powerless Saturday.

While many people will be away recovering from turkey dinners, those who plan to work on campus will be without electricity from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. Saturday morning, said George Hecht, director of the physical plant.

Hecht said in a memorandum to University staff the power shutdown will stop all electrical power, refrigeration, air and heating systems, elevators and anything else that uses power.

People who use computers should shut them off beforehand to avoid possible power fluctuation damage, Hecht said.

The power outage is necessary so contractors can modify electrical systems to prepare for new transformer installations, Hecht said.

"It's going to prepare us for entry into the 21st century," said John Tyler, University construction project manager. "The general theme is to update our transformers that have been in service longer than their design life, and to generally position the University community's electrical system for the future."

Without electricity will be Cascade Hall, Oregon Hall, Streisinger Hall, Esslinger Hall, Pacific Hall, Willamette Hall, the old portion of the EMU, Onyx Bridge, Deschutes Hall, Volcanology, Huestis Hall, Klamath Hall, Deady Hall, Earl/Straub, the east part of Hamilton, Law Center, Allen Hall, Villard Hall and the north and east sections of Lawrence.

Contact Tyler at 6-5583 for more information.

al harassment and rape. In addition to that, we've rewritten our student handbooks to include these issues."

Members of the committee, along with international student groups on campus, plan to adapt a brochure on rape to several languages and cultures for international students.

That brochure, Creating A Rape-free Environment is currently available to all students.

It was put together by members of the Unwanted Sexual Behavior task force. Committee members are requesting that in the future, the English version of the brochure include a section on international students.

"We need to educate the general population about being sensitive to international students," said Sandy Tsuneyoshi, psychologist at the University's Counseling Center and committee member.

The group has also made a videotape available to international student groups. The Wrong Idea presents different scenarios involving international students in sexual harassment situations with professors and other students. Committee members have offered to serve as facilitators at meetings where the tape is shown.

Stark said plans are also under way to produce such a videotape at the University.

Fouad Elgharabli, member of the committee and of the Arab Student Union, said it is important for international students to know more about how others feel about discussing rape and sexual harassment.

"It is not something that we talk about among ourselves," he said. "There are a lot of misconceptions and misunderstandings among international students themselves."

Tsuneyoshi said that even if a student does not speak English well, it's not an insurmountable barrier in a crisis situation.

"You don't need technical words to talk about feelings," she said, adding that students have told her some things are easier to talk about in English.

Resources are available to students who have been involved in sexual harassment or rape situation.

The Counseling Center, International Student Services and the American English Institute all offer guidance. If a student intends to press charges after an incident, the ASUO Legal Services office can help.
