Iron lung

Biology Professor Nathan Tublitz (left) tells geophysics graduate student Ken Dueker about the merits of animal research, using the obsolete "iron lung" to make his point. Strides in medical research — some of it performed on animals — have outdated this device that once enabled people with paralytic diseases like polio to breathe.

Poll majority approves sales tax

PORTLAND (AP) — Seven of 10 Oregonians favor replacing property taxes cut by Measure 5 with other revenue, according to a poll released Tuesday.

The poll by Moore Information of Portland also found that more than half of those responding favored a sales tax. Increasing most other types of taxes drew far less support.

Moore Information interviewed 400 respondents statewide during the telephone poll, conducted Nov. 19-20. The poll has a 5 percent margin of error.

State Rep. Ted Calouri, R-Beaverton, praised the poll. He said it showed support for replacing property taxes that eventually will be limited by Measure 5 to $15 per $1,000 of assessed value.

But Don McIntire, a chief sponsor of the measure passed by voters Nov. 6, denounced the poll as a way to "give sustenance and succor to those legislators of ours who are still lusting after a sales tax."

McIntire, who opposes a sales tax, claimed the poll was skewed by the way its questions were phrased.

The key question in the poll asked whether governments and school districts should be forced to operate without replacing the property tax cuts.

"What this poll proves is that Oregonians are not a miserly lot," McIntire said.

Moore Information, which conducted surveys for 48 political clients during the 1990 elections, cautioned that sales tax support should be viewed skeptically. In 1985, before a September vote that defeated a sales tax, several polls showed a majority supporting the idea.

In the poll, 71 percent of respondents favored finding other sources of revenue.

Among those who voted for Measure 5, 66 percent believed state and local governments should look for other sources of money.

When read a list of options for raising revenue, 55 percent of all respondents favored a sales tax on goods except food and medicine.
